THE QUESTION BOX.

Is there a white seeded onion, and if so, what is its name?

What is the cause of beets going to seed without making bottoms?

Why is it I cannot get sets, here in the state of Washington, from the perennial onion that I received from the east two years ago, and why don't they multiply as they do in the east? C. J. J.

There is not a white seeded onion, as far as we know.

Beets and many other biennial crops go to seed when a sufficient check in their growth takes place. A long spell of dry weather coming after conditions have been favorable to a good growth may cause a check, and when rains come again and conditions favor a second quick growth the natural tendency of a biennial plant is to push forward to the second natural stage, which is the production of seed.

There are no reasons except adverse climatic or soil conditions that can prevent a perennial or Egyptian onion from fulfilling its natural growth anywhere.

THE MARKET GARDENER'S VIEW

I believe I am the gardener whose offer of $10 a pound for seed of the Prizetaker onion, guaranteed true to name, was published nearly a year ago in the Rural New Yorker. A number of prominent seed firms replied to the proposition by saying that probably this man would be willing to pay the price for guaranteed seed, but the majority would not, hence there was not one of them willing to guarantee any portion even of genuine Prizetaker. As a general proposition I would not like to pay $10 a pound for true seed of the Prizetaker, for I know it can be grown pure and placed in the hands of the planter for less, but were I obliged to choose between true-to-name seed at $10 a pound and the miserable mixture sometimes exposed for sale under that name for nothing I would choose the $10 seed.

The last few years I have grown some of my own seed. I do not do this as a matter of choice, but because I cannot buy the kind of seed I want. The onions I selected for seed are large, a perfect globe with a small neck, smaller even than a lead pencil, of a beautiful, perfect straw color. Had I crated up those onions in a crate similar to those that are sold for 5 cents a pound in grocery stores under the name of "Spanish," no man could have told the difference between mine and the Spanish; I could have sold mine for the same price the Spanish onions sold for, and with the money so received might now buy one and one-half pounds of Prizetaker seed for every pound I harvested. You will see that I am out all of the labor and expense of growing, harvesting and cleaning the seed besides. The commercial grower, of course, may be able to grow his seed cheaper, but he cannot grow the kind of seed that I have for the amount of money he gets as his share and live and prosper as he deserves.

I believe I am within the bounds of reason and truth when I say that owing to seed adulteration the planter loses millions annually. This fact was brought home to me again last fall when I placed upon the market turnips grown from seed of my own growing in competition with turnips grown from seed bought from the seed merchants. Gardeners would pick up a turnip from my basket and exclaim, "Why, they look as though they were hand-painted." Others wanted to know what kind of washing powder I used that produced such bright, clean turnips, but everyone wanted to know the name of the turnip. When I told them it was the Red-top White Globe, they could scarcely believe it.

"Why," they said, "we planted the same kind, but we have no such turnips."
Of course not; I didn't have them either, before. I sold them for 50 cents a half bushel basket and though I put as many as thirty baskets a trip on my market wagon I never had enough to go around, and this when turnips of the common variety went begging for a buyer at 25 cents a basket. In producing this seed
I selected a turnip somewhat elongated, with as small a top and tap root as possible, the white I wanted as waxy white as possible, and the purple as bright and distinct as colors can be produced. I certainly have a thoroughbred turnip, but don't anybody ask me for seed. I have none to sell, nor shall I ever be in the seed business.

Now a word as to the price of seeds charged by the seed merchant. If the grower of seeds who produces such seeds as I am advocating got every cent that the seed merchant sells his stock for, I do not believe that this would be sufficient pay to grow seed as pure and carefully as it should be grown. Poor seed is dear at any price, but it seems to me that quality is lost sight of by the seed merchant in a desire to produce cheap seeds, probably to undersell his competitor. I might sum up the principal causes of cheap and inferior seed, which may be attributed to a species of parasites, bugs, humbugs and other insects which feed upon both production and distribution of the seed business.
Prof. Slingerland usually is able to name a remedy or spray to destroy or keep in check all of them except the humbug.
This is the one that mails you that high-priced catalogue full of impossible pictures and exaggerated descriptions. I have in mind a picture of a Prizetaker onion in one of those catalogues. I wish I were able to reproduce it in size, shape and color. If these fellows could be eliminated and the seed grower brought together with the gardener, truck and general farmer, our crops would be much better, our meadows cleaner and freer from noxious weeds; in fact, it would greatly benefit both producer and consumer.

J. H. BOLLINGER.

THE STYLE IN CATALOGUES.

As 1907 styles in seed catalogues will prevail in 1908, "only more so," it will be interesting to note what a writer in a leading agricultural paper said last spring:

"The seed and nursery catalogues for the season are now nearly all in the hands of readers. With rare exceptions they are a fine lot—probably the most attractive and useful set of horticultural trade publications that has been issued in this country. That there is still room for improvement, the business firms responsible for them will doubtless admit, but the progress made in eliminating the objectionable features of former issues is most gratifying. The covers generally are free from the glaring color effects once so commonly used. Many are in monochrome or subdued tints that are at once artistic and agreeable. Colored plates are much reduced in number and generally only used to illustrate some striking specialty. Well-finished half-tones to greater degree than ever replace the astounding woodcuts of former days. But it is in the descriptive matter that the greatest reforms are made. Some of the catalogues have been re-written to considerable extent and nearly all appear to have been carefully edited. Generally a more conservative tone has been adopted, but a small minority deem it good business to retain much of the old vociferous phraseology, and some of the exaggerated illustrations. Apparently their customers are able to estimate these windy statements at their proper value. Novelties of promise are few, and their claims are usually presented in more restrained style than heretofore."

WORK WITH EASTER LILIES.

Prof. B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, in a report in the Yearbook, has this to say of the work done with Easter lilies:

The growing of lilies in the United States is rapidly becoming an important industry. Large quantities of bulbs have in years past been imported from Bermuda, Japan, and other countries, and the demand seems on the increase. Various lines of work have been undertaken and carried out by G. W. Oliver, chiefly for the purpose of securing new types of lilies by hybridizing and crossing and to demonstrate the practicability of growing lilies in the United States directly from seed.

One of the most promising hybrids has resulted from crossing the Philippine lily (Lilium Philippense) and the Bermuda

BODDINGTON'S Gigantic Cyclamen

The seed of Cyclamen is often sown too early in the year. September is the best time. Boddington's Gigantic Cyclamen are unequalled for size and quality of bloom. A magnificent strain of Cyclamen, with flowers of extraordinary size and substance.

- Gigantic White Butterfly. Pure white; immense flowers.
Gigantic Snowflake. The largest of all white Cyclamen.
Gigantic Cherry-red. Most brilliant and effective.
Gigantic Rose. Immense flowers of a pleasing shade of light rose.
Gigantic Pink. Exquisite shade of soft pink.
Gigantic Crimson. Most striking color; under artificial light appears to be almost luminous.
Gigantic Crimson and White. A magnificent flower of the largest type.
Gigantic Syringa Blue. (New.) A charming color.
Gigantic Lilac. A very pleasing color, lighting up well at night.
Any of the above varieties, trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50; per 1000, $12.00.
Gigantic Mixed. A mixture of all the above varieties in proper proportion. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.25; 1000 seeds, $10.00.
PRINCESS MAY. A very pretty type of Cyclamen. Color, pink with suffused blotches of crimson at base of petals. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.
SALMON QUEEN. Undoubtedly one of the most distinct and beautiful salmon colors found in cyclamen. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.

lily. The Philippine lily takes two months to come into bloom from the period of planting the bulb, while the Lilium longiflorum and its various forms require in the neighborhood of five months. Therefore it would be a great saving if the time taken to force a good Easter lily could be reduced from one to two months. With a view to bringing this about, the hybridization of the Philippine lily and the Harrisii variety of the Lilium longiflorum has been effected. The result of the cross is a flower longer than that of Harrisii, but not quite as broad and a little shorter than that of the Philippine lily. The segments of the flower of the Harrisii are from five to six inches long. Up to this time we have had to depend on the Philippine Islands for the supply of the Philippine lilies, and they arrive early in the spring, when we can not use them for forcing. By growing them in California we can get them in the fall in good time for forcing into flower during the winter. The plants so far grown in California do not show signs of the lily disease.

The second line of work in connection with the production of lilies has been under way for the past four years. It consists, first, of selecting plants which show freedom from disease as manifested by spotted leaves and distorted flowers. The varieties selected are those well known under the names of multiflorum, Harrisii, and giganteum. When these plants come into bloom the flowers are cross-fertilized, with certain purposes in view. The seeds from these plants are sent to California and other places about the end of the summer. They are planted out in the field in the following spring, and in a year from that period the growth made by the seedlings is so great that hundreds of plants have been recently produced bearing in the neighborhood of thirty flowers to a stem. As one would naturally suppose, disease is not anything like as prevalent in these California-grown plants as it is in Bermuda and Japan, the present sources of supply of bulbs used in the United States. So far as the work has gone, the results have been very encouraging, especially in southern California, so that we are reasonably certain that the supply of bulbs will in due course of time be produced within our own borders.

There is a large tract of country with soil suitable for lily growing in the southwestern portion of California, from Santa Barbara down and extending inward for several miles. The bulbs can be harvested by August 1. Some of those produced during the past season from two and three-year-old plants are very large and satisfactory. Among some bulbs recently received by the Department of Agriculture was one which measured fourteen and one-half inches in circumference; others closely approximated this size. It would seem that the method of reproduction by seed, saving desirable types from the seedlings and propagating those only by division and not from scales, is the true solution of the problem confronting the Easter lily industry in the United States. Should it be found practicable to fix any of the varieties so that they will come absolutely true from seed, then the method of procedure will be facilitated.

NORWICH, CONN.

The dahlia show of the New London County Horticultural Society, held Saturday afternoon and evening, September 19, in Buckingham Memorial, is reported to have been the most successful ever given by the society. The attendance was the largest in the society's history. The exhibition was twice as large as ever before, and there was not room enough to show the flowers to best advantage.

There were all kinds and colors of dahlias. The two cactus varieties, Aurora and Gondola, carried off most of the honors.

The entire west end of the hall was occupied with the gladiolus show by B. H. Tracy, of Wenham, Mass., who showed 325 spikes of different colors.

There was a large jardiniere of the American gladiolus by John Lewis Childs, of New York, there being 100 spikes.

The exhibit of W. W. Rawson, of Boston, included dahlias and gladioli.

Much interest was shown in the display of single dahlia seedlings by Alexander MacLellan, of Newport, who had four large vases, with 150 blossoms, largely of the Twentieth Century type.

The dahlias were classified and arranged by William W. Ives and the asters by S. Alpheus Gilbert.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Burglars entered the residence of A. J. Rossi on the afternoon of September 26, in the absence of the family, and stole jewelry valued at about $200.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—The police are detaining Arthur M. Hanks at the county hospital. He is considered insane and tells many strange tales, one of which is that he murdered his father six years ago. The father is now thought to be living in Rochester, Minn.

SEATTLE, WASH.—J. J. Bonnell's nursery, at Twenty-sixth avenue north and East Galer street, was slightly damaged recently by a fire which started, from an unknown cause, in a neighboring store-room. Some valuable plants and shrubs were destroyed and it was only through great effort that the greenhouses were saved.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business is quiet and flowers are not overplentiful. The ending of the aster season has thrown the bulk of demands on the carnation crop and, as a result, everything has been closely cleaned up. This would not be so noticeable if the outside mums were in sufficient quantity to be of material benefit, but it will be a couple of weeks before they will be plentiful, and in the meanwhile we will have to worry along on a short assortment. The continued cool weather has not been conducive to an excess of indoor carnations, and with some of the lighter shades there has really been a shortage. Bright reds have also been in better demand than they have in supply, and the same can be said of practically everything in the rose line.

Violets are quite plentiful. The growers are charging the stores $1 per dozen bunches. White dahlias have made their appearance in large quantities and they come in handy for funeral work. Sweet peas are gradually getting shorter of stem and the flowers are beginning to show the effects of the long, cold nights. Amaryllis are practically out of market for the year. Valley is plentiful, but moves slowly. Japanese lilies are still in the market and the demand for them keeps up well. They have been one of the best money-makers for the florists this year.

All the dealers have an idea that business will be good in October and it is to be hoped they prophesy well.

Various Notes.

Thomas Hooper has completed a large fern house at his place on Grand avenue, Elmhurst.

E. James, of Elmhurst, has one large house completely devoted to poinsettias for the holiday trade.

Clarke Bros., of Fruitvale, are cutting enormous quantities of Japanese lilies at the present time.

The Hassard Nursery Co., of Melrose, is devoting a large portion of its ground to the growing of stevia for winter cutting.

T. R. Phillips has left for a week's trip to Los Angeles.

J. M. Holland will dispose of his retail store at Mountain View cemetery.

NARCISSUS AND DAFFODIL.

Their Culture in California.

Although the narcissus and daffodil are usually supposed to be of the easiest culture, it is surprising how few California growers have much success with field-grown flowers and bulbs after the first or second season.

They usually claim that the bulbs "run out" and, after a couple of seasons, quit blooming and finally disappear completely. This is more noticeable with yellow daffodils than with Paper White or other varieties of narcissus.

To begin with, the bulbs should be grown by themselves, each sort well separated and nothing mixed with them. Most of the varieties in this climate should be separated and transplanted at least once in three years. This does not answer for all varieties, but with the usually grown commercial kinds it is a good rule to follow.

Provided the soil is not too heavy or too sandy, I have had practically the same success in half a dozen different kinds of soil in this locality, so a slight excess of any one ingredient does not much matter. The ground must be spaded and worked well between the rows to insure the proper development of the young bulbs, for the reason that in the rainless portion of California the ground will invariably dry out too much and pack too hard to allow the bulbs to grow properly. It might be thought that artificial watering would be a good plan under such conditions, but I have found that working the ground is much the preferable way. Always allow the tops to dry off naturally.

The bulbs should be dug at least once in three years and replanted in newer ground. If the beds are neglected the bulbs have the habit of apparently hunting the moisture and will always be found very deep in the ground. Under these conditions the bulbs are always weak, and it is so long before the moisture reaches them that they usually are very late in flowering. Again, the effort of sending up a stem is so great on the bulb that the flower is usually weak or else the bulb produces nothing but leaves and finally dies.

It is chiefly for the foregoing reasons that the growers do not succeed in keeping bulb fields indefinitely, and not because the soil or climate of California is unsuited to bulb culture. G.

HANDLING NATIVE PALMS.

In the vicinity of San Francisco this is one of the best times during the year to handle nursery-grown palms and to transplant them from the ground into tubs so as to have them handy for winter and spring trade. It is surprising what a difference it makes whether customers are shown palms in boxes or growing in the open. If they have had any experience they will usually tell you that palms cannot be transplanted with any degree of safety from the nursery rows, and they prefer to purchase a plant in a box, even if they have to pay extra for it.

The transplanting of palms by gardeners who do not fully understand the points that must be borne in mind is to blame for this, and many a nice order has been lost because the purchaser absolutely refused to buy anything not already established in a box. There is nothing easier to transplant than a palm, provided the gardener understands a few common principles that apply to a large majority of the palm family. The first point is the season. Outdoor-grown plants should always be handled during the growing season, which extends from April to December. I mean here, of course, where it is necessary to cut a considerable portion of the roots during the operation. Next cut back the leaves in proportion as you have slaughtered the roots. This makes but little difference in this climate, where the palm trees grow rapidly and a new set of branches is soon formed. This is especially important when the tree has been growing for quite a time without being transplanted and has made a lot of heavy roots, which must necessarily be lost in the transplanting.

How far the proposition of transplanting large palms may be carried without killing them may be judged by the fact that the writer removed fifteen Phoenix Canariensis from a bed of pure sand, none of the plants less than ten feet high and from which all the soil dropped when they were taken up. But being particular to get all the roots possible and cutting off ninety per cent of the foliage, keeping them shaded and well watered for a month, was all that was necessary and in a year's time they were practically as large as they had been before and were all well established in tubs. This can be done equally well with any of the varieties of native fan palms, although it is always advisable to try to keep some of the soil intact on the roots, but if this is impossible it really does not make any great difference, provided the grower is in condition to handle them as I have advised.

When palms are in their most dormant state, and that is during our coldest months, they cannot be transplanted as easily as at this time of the year. They do not stand an excess of moisture and if they are to be left a considerable time in damp, frosty ground at the time that they are not naturally making quantities of new roots, they will quickly succumb. I refer here, of course, to plants that have lost a quantity of roots in transplanting and not to well established plants from pots or tubs. G.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

THE Hutchinson Nursery, at Hutchinson, Minn., is erecting a new storage house.

THE more white pine is planted the more favorably it will be known as a reliable hardy evergreen, and a beautiful one as well.

IN October magazines Peters' Nursery, Knoxville, Tenn., is advertising field-grown roses for fall planting. Fall planting deserves every encouragement.

THE Hurricane Nursery Co. has been incorporated at Hurricane, Utah, with a capital stock of $5,000. Amos Workman, J. W. Imley, Charles A. Workman, Jacob L. Workman and T. H. Hinton are the directors.

THERE appears to be again a growing demand for Hydrangea paniculata. There is a great deal of it used for decorative work, especially at such resorts of the wealthy as Newport, R. I., where it is, they say, a common sight to see a grower driving into the city with a wagon-load, the whole to be used up in one decoration. Standard specimen plants of this hydrangea are gaining favor.

THE choice varieties of pecans, which are now being propagated by budding and grafting and are being planted so largely in up-to-date orchards, are rarely seen in the general market. Many people have never seen them and fewer still have tested them in comparison with the nut from the common seedling. They need to be seen, cracked and eaten in order to appreciate their superiority.

BUYERS of fruit trees are sometimes apt to blame nurserymen for the failure of the trees to grow, when the cause is plainly visible in their own neglect to take reasonable care of the trees in keeping the soil cultivated and free from weeds and grass, at least during the first season. It is idle to expect young fruit trees to thrive when the ground is overrun with a rank growth of grass or weeds.

IF heavy rains are not forthcoming before frost sets in, it will go hard with young evergreens in many parts of the country. Wherever it is possible to give these water by artificial means, no time should be lost in doing so, because thereby many valuable young trees may be saved. In several places hardy rhododendrons are already suffering severely because of so long a spell of dry weather. It may be well to go to the trouble and expense of watering these also, especially if there is grave danger of their not surviving the coming winter.

FOREST experiment stations will soon be established in a number of the states of the west, according to plans which have just been completed by the United States Forest Service. These new stations are expected to do the same for the development of American forests as agricultural experiment stations have done for the improvement of the country's farms. As a first step in this work an experiment station has already

EVERGREEN SEEDLINGS.

The subject of duty on evergreen seedlings, which was gone into on the Ouwerkerk case, has been up again before the United States General Appraisers. On the protest of F. H. Shallus, Baltimore, General Appraiser Waite made the following ruling:

"On the authority of G. A. 6169 (the Ouwerkerk case), certain rhododendrons, evergreen seedlings, hollies, etc., were held dutiable as evergreen seedlings under paragraph 252, tariff act of 1897, as claimed by the importers. An item of azaleas was held to have been properly classified as such under paragraph 251."

In a protest filed by Jackson & Perkins Co., Newark, N. Y., it was claimed that holly plants, classified as evergreen seedlings under paragraph 252, tariff act of 1897, were dutiable under the provision of the same paragraph for nursery or greenhouse stock. Protest was overruled. General Appraiser Waite made the statement:

"The question involved in this case was discussed by the Board in G. A. 6169 (the Ouwerkerk case), wherein the conclusion was reached that the provision for evergreen seedlings in paragraph 252 is not restricted to plants of a coniferous nature, but applies to seedlings of all plants that are 'evergreen'—that is, which retain their greenness or verdure throughout the year, as distinguished from those which are deciduous, or which lose their foliage every year. The above decision has been affirmed, by the circuit court (153 Fed. Rep., 916; T. D. 28183) and by the circuit court of appeals (T. D. 28953). The holly, according to this distinction, belongs to the class of evergreen plants, and it is so characterized by the Standard and Century dictionaries.

"The importers also contend that the word 'seedlings' applies only to plants 'in the seed bed, which have not been transplanted,' and that the holly plants in question are not properly classifiable as seedlings, inasmuch as they have been 'transplanted from the seed bed and grown on for two seasons.' It was held by the Board in G. A. 5305 (T. D. 24305) that the word 'seedling' applies to plants grown from the seed, as distinguished from those propagated by cuttings, budding, or grafting, irrespective of whether or not they had been transplanted. No appeal having ever been taken from this ruling, it will govern in this case."

INJURY FROM CARBOLINIUM.

Will you please let me know whether Carbolinium, sold by the Carbolinium Co., of Milwaukee, is an injury to trees when applied to the bark? A friend applied it to sugar and Norway maples, ranging in size from six to twelve inches in diameter. It was applied last fall and about ten died this spring and the balance are dead in the trunks, the bark having turned brown, and in some instances the bark has loosened and cracked open, while the leaves are green as yet. This company says it is to be applied to the live trees as a tonic. W. E. N.

While I have never used Carbolinium and do not know anything of its composition, I should imagine from what I have read of it, that while it might be useful in dressing cuts or wounds on trees, the application of this, or any similar substance, to the bark of trees as a tonic could hardly fail to be injurious. Common sense ought to teach us that trees cannot be fed by any dressing on the trunks. The roots are what support the trees, and to benefit the latter we must feed the former. Perhaps the Carbolinium company would be willing to give their reasons for advocating this preparation as a tree tonic. W. N. CRAIG.

Vegetable Forcing.

THE so-called French system of gardening has become so common near London that the English horticultural papers now have special departments devoted to its cultural details.

HENRY PRITCHARD, Astoria, N. Y., exhibited cucumbers grown under glass at the show at the American Institute, New York city, September 23. He had specimens thirteen inches long and took first prize.

FORCING RHUBARB.

Perhaps the easiest to force of all vegetables is rhubarb, but the ease with which it may be grown, at a time when it cannot be obtained outdoors, only makes it more desirable as a subject for winter forcing. This is especially evident in view of the well-known fact that the article produced by artificial means is far more delicious and pleasing to the palate than that coming to perfection under natural conditions.

Any time after frost sets in, the first batch of rhubarb roots may be brought in and placed anywhere in a greenhouse, on a bench or underneath it, in a heated cellar or in suitable boxes or tubs. Under the roots there should be a layer of leaf-mold or soil, and over them a sufficient quantity to completely cover them. When this is done they should be well watered, and thereafter, until the crop is ready and cut, they should be kept fairly well supplied with moisture.

In some cases and in some locations it may be necessary to make provision for readily getting at the roots needed for forcing without having to go to the trouble of digging through frozen ground. That can be accomplished by digging up all that will be required for forcing early in the winter, and placing them where they will be available from time to time.

If the forcing is done by placing the roots on a bench, it will be well to erect some contrivance that will afford some shade, because thereby there will be more eatable material and less foliage. M.

IN OKLAHOMA.

We are using the Bordeaux mixture, applied in the soil, about three gallons to a space 5x12 feet. Would it be safe to apply that amount between each crop of lettuce, to prevent the damp, or fungus? Or is there danger of getting too much bluestone in the soil? We are using solid beds.

We would also like your advice regarding lath sheds, built similar to those used for growing roses in summer, about seven feet high, with the laths spaced about three-fourths of an inch apart on the sides and roof. Would that kind of shed be better for growing summer or early fall crops of lettuce than the muslin beds? Our location is in Oklahoma.

H. & C.

If your beds are spaded thoroughly and deeply, adding more well-rotted manure before replanting each time, there would be little danger of injuring the roots by getting too much copper sulphate in the soil, at least not until several doses had been given. It is, however, a good plan to change to some other kind of fungicide frequently. There are several other remedies or preventives, such as weak ammonia water, dusting with lime and sulphur mixed, or frequently with lime alone; boiling water applied the same as Bordeaux mixture, sterilizing by steam. Personally, I prefer the boiling water.

A cool temperature and plenty of fresh air will produce a condition unfavorable for the fungus, even if all the germs or spores are not killed by the various remedies.

I have never heard of growing lettuce in the slat houses as mentioned, but think they would be as good as the muslin houses, possibly better, on account of being cooler. The lettuce would probably draw up a trifle taller in such a house. The slats might be farther apart for lettuce. Plenty of water will help to keep the temperature down. H. G.

A LETTUCE AND RADISH HOUSE.

I am building a vegetable house, 16x100, in the south bank in a Wyoming city. How should I heat it? Should the heat be under the beds? How should I arrange my beds for lettuce and radishes? Can they be grown in the same house? How deep do I want my beds? Any information you will give me will be thankfully received, as I do not know a thing about the business. Can you tell me where I can get any literature on the subject?

E. W. O.

In answer to the above, I would say that the heating pipes should be under the benches, and a hot water system would be the best in this case.

As to the arrangement of the benches, you can have three, one along each wall and a wider one in the center, or you can have two beds of equal width, with a walk along each wall and another walk in the middle of the house, provided the eaves are high enough for a walk along the wall. I would, however, recommend the former, as by having a bench three feet wide along each wall and one six or seven feet wide in the center of the house, only two walks are necessary.

Lettuce and radishes will do well in the same house and in the same temperature, which for both should be between 40 and 50 degrees at night and about 15 degrees warmer in the daytime.

A list of the horticultural books for sale by the REVIEW will be mailed to you or to anyone desiring them. Prof. L. H. Bailey's "Forcing Book" is probably the beginner's best guide.

For general purposes a bench six inches deep is most satisfactory. The house should be light and have ample heating equipment. The soil should be soft and rich. These are the first and most important points to remember. H. G.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

With asters and other outdoor stock practically at an end, last week found carnations and roses moving finely and everybody reports a good run of business. All stock is improving as time goes on, and undoubtedly will be much improved when the weather gets settled, for the unusual heat which we had until lately certainly was not beneficial.

Mums in the white and yellow shades are arriving in small lots and are easily disposed of. Green goods are about equal to the demand.

Various Notes.

Gust Pohl, who built quite an addition this summer, now has everything in apple pie order, with stock in good shape. He is beginning to cut some snapdragon of good quality.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. is getting ready to go into business on a much larger scale, to judge by the new ice-box, which has a capacity of four times that of the old one, and the leasing of new quarters two doors south of the present store, which will be used for bulbs and florists' supplies.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. says the shipping trade last week was fine and everything cleaned up well.

Nic Zweifel, at North Milwaukee, has the grading done preparatory to building another house, 28x200 feet.

Otto Sylvester, of Oconomowoc, Wis., was in town September 26, and says he had quite a time getting his stock housed this season.

Visitors: B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia; Mr. Dietsch, of the A. Dietsch Co., Chicago. E. O.

John W. Dunlop, Milwaukee's pioneer gardener and florist, will celebrate his ninety-fifth birthday anniversary October 16. On November 1 he will retire as superintendent of Juneau park, after thirteen years' service in that position. He has placed on the market his home-stand on Marshall street, and will go with his wife to Wauwatosa, where they will reside with a daughter. He has lived in Milwaukee since 1841 and is the oldest member of the Old Settlers' Club.

WHEELING, W. VA.—The Wheeling Floral Co. has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $5,000, all of which has been subscribed and $500 paid. The incorporators are John and Lucy Dieckmann, Arthur and A. B. Langhans, and Ralph Taylor, all of this city.

RICHMOND, VA.—Thomas Young, of New York city, has brought suit against Mrs. Frances F. Hagaman for $168.25, the amount due for flowers purchased by her from Mr. Young while she was staying at the Colonial boarding house, in this city. The proprietor of the boarding house and others are also involved in the suit. This suit will, it is said, be followed by others from New York merchants.

THE NEW PINK ROSE,

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its first meeting since July in its old quarters at 7 East Town street, Tuesday night, September 22. There was a good attendance for the first meeting.

A new entertainment committee was appointed by President R. A. Currie, as follows: Jas. McKellar, I. D. Seibert, Jake Reichert, Sherman Stephens and William Metzmaier.

The boys are looking forward to our next dance, which will be in November, and no doubt we will give several during the coming season. The committee is planning to have something of interest every meeting night, which will be the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month. J. M.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

Business has not improved to any extent, owing to the lingering summer, accompanied by a long-continued dry spell. This is the forty-sixth day without rain. Everybody has had considerable funeral work, but not much else to do. Roses are plentiful, but good carnations are scarce.

Ben Kramer says business has been good with him.

John Elsperrmann received a large consignment of bulbs from Holland last week. They have had a good run of business.

H. Seymour is cutting large quantities of carnations of the short to medium grades, and he finds ready sale for them.

Nellie Goodge says business has been a little slow, but expects it to pick up soon.

Royston & Fenton report a good wholesale trade for the month on roses.

E. L. F.

BARRE, MASS.—George R. Simonds, who conducts a successful market gardening department in connection with his greenhouse business, was placed in charge of the vegetable exhibit at the agricultural fair.

The Market.

Many new faces are seen on the streets, but not in the stores as yet, and there is but little gain over the last two weeks. All kinds of seasonable flowers are plentiful; in fact, away ahead of the demand, especially dahlias in dark colors and Cochet roses, of which thousands are seen. American Beauties are selling well and are good. Carnations are finding ready sale at $1.50 per hundred. Asters are about over, which is regretted at the stores. Single violets have made their appearance, but are poor as yet and hardly last the day out.

weather was fine, though extremely warm, and the attendance was about 700 on the first day. Besides the Baltimore and local contingent, there were many visitors from the trade in Philadelphia, New York and Washington, and all were more than pleased at the extent, variety and beauty of the display. In the big packing shed, which is three stories high, there were tables running the full length of the shed, on which was spread an abundant and tempting array of edibles, and down the center of the table were enormous bunches of dahlias of every size, shape and hue. Under about 400,000 square feet of glass there are growing more than 400 varieties of geraniums for stock purposes. The farm now includes some 300 acres. The party inspected some bench material which was being treated with creosote in one of the creosote tanks which have been erected on Mr. Vincent's place, as he is a firm believer in the use of creosote on all greenhouse material.

PUEBLO, COLO.

On account of the large number of exhibits in the various departments of the state fair, it was necessary to begin the awarding of prizes earlier than usual, and the judges were hard at work early on the first day, September 15. All of the floral entries were judged on that day. The awards to professional florists were as follows:

Asters—One hundred blooms white, Park Floral Co., Denver, first; G. Fleischer, Pueblo, second.

One hundred blooms red or pink, Park Floral Co., first; W. W. Wilmore, Denver, second.

One hundred blooms purple or lavender, Park Floral Co. first, G. Fleischer second.

Gladioli—Collection of twenty-five spikes, any strain, H. J. Berry, Denver, first.

Vase of twelve spikes, red, H. J. Berry first.

Vase of twelve spikes, any other color, William Clark, Colorado Springs, first; G. Fleischer second.

Dahlias—Best and largest collection, not less than fifty varieties, W. W. Wilmore first, H. J. Berry second.

Collection of twenty-five distinct varieties, five blooms each, W. W. Wilmore first, H. J. Berry second.

Best and largest collection of cactus varieties, W. W. Wilmore first, H. J. Berry second.

Twelve varieties, to be judged according to their desirability for cut flowers, five blooms each, W. W. Wilmore first, William Clark second.

Perennials—Collection of cut blooms, Park Floral Co. first, H. J. Berry second.

Carnations—Vase of twenty-five blooms, red, Park Floral Co. first; J. W. Smith, Colorado Springs, second.

Vase of twenty-five blooms, white, Park Floral Co. first, J. W. Smith second.

Vase of twenty-five blooms, pink, Marquis or lighter, Park Floral Co. first; Pike's Peak Floral Co., Colorado Springs, second.

Vase of twenty-five blooms, darker than Marquis, Park Floral Co. first, Pike's Peak Floral Co. second.

Vase of twenty-five blooms, any other color, Park Floral Co. first.

Sweepstakes, vase of twenty-five carnations, exhibited in any six of the preceding classes, Park Floral Co.

Roses—Vase of twelve American Beauties, stems not to exceed five feet, Park Floral Co. first, J. W. Smith second.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.—Lawrence Cotter, of Dorchester, Mass., has been engaged as superintendent of the Lake View Rose Gardens, succeeding C. H. Roney, who resigned to go into business for himself.

MOUNT VERNON, IND.—William Kirkman, who suddenly left this city last May, has returned and accepted a position with the Mt. Vernon Floral Co.

About the time of Mr. Kirkman's disappearance an unknown man was killed on the Illinois Central railroad at Hanson, Ky., and the newspapers immediately identified the man as Mr. Kirkman, and for a short time Mr. Kirkman was dead—killed by the newspapers.

NOT ASLEEP.

We are well prepared to meet all demands. The Araucaria King means to sell his Araucarias, and the motto of the moveman means Keep a Moving. Eighteen years of experience of importing, growing, shipping and handling of Araucarias brings us in the foreground of any merchant in the business; so well known that any florist from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean can sing a song of Godfrey Aschmann's Araucarias.

CHEAPER THAN EVER—FERNS TO BEAT THE BAND.

Four houses full of choice Boston, Whitman and Scottii Ferns, 5, 5½, 6 and 7-in., all pot-grown, raised in snug houses which protect from stiff frosts; never were so fine as this year. Next on the program we carry a fine stock of choice Kentia Palms, Rubbers, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, etc., which stand a challenge with those of all the notable growers of America and Europe.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 tiers, 10 to 12 inches high, 40c; 5½-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 to 4 tiers, 12 to 15 inches high, 50c; 6-in. pots, 3 to 4 years old, 3, 4, 5 to 6 tiers, 16, 18, 20 to 22 inches high, 60c, 75c to $1.00 each.

Araucaria Robusta Compacta, 6-in. pots, 3 years old, 3 tiers, fine, beautiful plants, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, specimen plants; spring, 1907, importation; suitable for lawns or porches, 5 to 6 years old, 7-in. pots, 5 tiers, 25, 30, 35 to 40 inches high, same in width, beautiful plants, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 to $4.00 each.

Boston and Scottii ferns, 4-in., 20c; 5-in., 30c to 35c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c and 50c; 7-in. pots, as big as a bushel basket, 75c to $1.00. Scottii, 8 to 9-in. pans, made-up of 3 plants, 75c to $1.00 per pan. Whitman, 4-in., 20c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c and 50c. Whitman, in 8-in. pans, three large plants in a pan, 75c. Whitman, in 9-in. pans, 3 large plants in a pan $1.00. We have a big stock of these varieties and they are pot, not bench, grown. Amerpohill, 5-in., 30c, 35c to 40c.

Kentia Belmoreana, 5½ to 5½-in. pots, 25 to 30 inches high, 50c, 60c and 75c; 4-in., 20 inches high, 35c to 40c.

Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, a large one, about 40 inches high, in the center, surrounded by three smaller ones, $4.00 each.

Kentia Forsteriana, 6 to 7-in. pots, 36 inches high, $2.00; specimen, 7-in., 40 to 50 inches high, $2.50 to $3.00; 6-in., 30 inches high, $1.50; 6-in., 25 inches high, $1.00; 6-in., 20 to 25 inches high, 75c; 5 to 5½-in., 50c.

Cocos Weddelliana, bushy plants, 3-in., 15c, 18c and 20c; 4-in., 25c.

Ferns for Dishes, 2½-in., $4.00 per 100. A big stock, best assortment.

Cycas Revoluta, or Sago Palm, 6-in. to 7-in. pots, 5 to 20 leaves to a plant, 10c per leaf.

The Market.

A cold snap the latter part of last week gives promise of good business in the near future. The intense heat of the first part of the month brought all the roses out at one time, and, as a result, now when we need them they are scarce. Carnations are still short, but coming in larger quantities every day. Lilies are still plentiful.

Various Notes.

NEW ORLEANS.

The New Orleans Horticulturists held an interesting meeting September 17. Among the instructive and enjoyable features of the occasion was the exhibition by J. A. Newsham of orchids brought back by him from the tropics. Messrs. C. Eble and H. Papworth gave an interesting description of their recent visit to the national convention at Niagara Falls. The New Orleans Floral Society sent the Horticulturists $16.95, the former having decided to disband. Mr. Newsham resigned as chairman of the arrangement committee of the flower show, on account of press of business, and Mr. Papworth was appointed to succeed him. The resignation of W. P. McLennen was accepted and John Herne, H. A. Steckler and M. J. Gurthe elected new members. The Horticulturists voted $5 to the Diamond Festival.

A Wonderful New Nephrolepis

Nephrolepis Superbissima

Introduction of 1908

We desire to call attention to this new fern, which originated with us and which we are introducing this year. It is a very unique and distinct novelty—as distinct from Nephrolepis Piersoni and Piersoni elegantissima as they were from Bostoniensis. It is, in fact, a complete break. The fronds are very heavily imbricated, the pinnæ overlapping, making the fronds very dense and compact.

It differs from the other Nephrolepis not only in form, but also in color, being a richer and darker green—entirely different from the yellowish green of all the other Nephrolepis. The plant is very sturdy in its habit, the fronds never breaking down.

While a photograph shows a similarity to its predecessors, it is absolutely distinct, not only in the formation of the fronds and color, but also in its habit and general characteristics. It makes a much more dwarf and compact growth, the fronds being very dense, firm and rigid, and having a great deal more substance, so that it will stand more knocking around than any other fern of this type.

It is a sterling novelty. Experts who have seen it consider it by far the best fern ever sent out. It is a plant that needs to be seen to have its great value and sterling qualities appreciated. It really is not in the same class with the other varieties.

It was awarded a First-class Certificate by the Royal Horticultural Society at Crystal Palace in London, November, 1907, the plants exhibited there having been shipped from New York two weeks before that time. After being exhibited in London, the same plants were shipped to Edinburgh, Scotland, where they were again awarded a First-class Certificate by the Scottish Horticultural Society. This will indicate the value of the plant as a novelty, and also demonstrates in a very conclusive manner its fine keeping and shipping qualities.

We have just begun shipping advance orders, and new orders can now be shipped immediately on receipt.

Fine, strong plants, 2¼-in. pots, $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100. 4-in. pots, $7.00 per doz.; $50.00 per 100. 6-in. pots, $1.50 each; $15.00 per doz.

In the floral department the exhibitors were Crabb & Hunter Floral Co., Grand Rapids Floral Co., Eli Cross, H. Danhoff, Madge A. Dolan and Lilla V. Kipp, the last a dahlia specialist from Rockford, Mich.

The floral designs were the finest ever shown at the West Michigan Fair. So evenly balanced were Cross's and Crabb & Hunter's designs that it took the judges over three hours to decide which should receive first prize. HERE IS ONE SAMPLE OF THE SCORES OF UNSOLICITED CERTIFICATES
WE GET FROM OUR CUSTOMERS.

KROESCHELL BROS. CO., Chicago, Ill.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 1, 1908.

Dear Sirs: I wish to write you a few lines concerning your No. 2 boiler which we received last fall. Your boiler proved to be excellent in material and workmanship. It did the work very nicely last winter with a small amount of coal. Others used up more than a carload while we used only 15 tons all winter, including what we used in the dwelling. Every one in our neighborhood has got a Kroeschell boiler. As soon as the other greenhouse men saw it they took a liking to it and now they've all got one. We speak well of your boiler to all who see it. The Kroeschell is our favorite if we ever get another.

Yours Respectfully,

JOHN KOENIG, Box 88, Valley Crossing, O.

NOT CAST IRON—Has thin waterways. Heats quickly. It is the most efficient, safest and most economical boiler built. Very powerful. 15 sizes, heating from the smallest greenhouse up to 50,000 square feet of glass to 60 degrees, at 15 degrees below zero. Prices and catalogue on application.

Greenhouse Heating.

DO NOT PAINT THE PIPES.

We are thinking of painting the heating pipes in our new range with linseed oil or lampblack, but we have been told that it decreases their heating efficiency. Will you please advise us? J. F. C.

Do not paint your heating pipes. You will regret it. The main flow through a potting shed or under the ridge of a house may be given a coat of asphaltum varnish during the summer, but do not paint the pipes under the benches or along walls; rusty pipes are the best radiators. L. C. C.

A WRONG USE OF THE TANK.

I wish to know if my house will be properly heated as I have it piped. It is 20x36 and is located in eastern Massachusetts. It has a 1½-inch feed pipe from the boiler and three lines of 1¼-inch pipe on both sides and end. The flow is direct from the boiler to the tank, up in the gable. All three lines of 1¼-inch pipe are fed from the one 1½-inch flow that leads from the boiler to the tank, then down to the three lines, around to the boiler, and through one 1½-inch pipe into the boiler.

Now, this tank is cast-iron, tight and shaped like a watermelon, with a water gauge on the west end and a regular boiler safety valve on the east end. I have a Walker & Pratt boiler, with a 12-inch grate and a fire-box twenty-four inches deep. The question is, will this boiler work all right with this piping? Every particle of water goes through this tank. The tank is half full, allowing for expansion. Would it be better to pipe direct from the boiler to the three lines of pipe, with a small pipe at the highest point into a tank, then from the tank to the lowest return point? I can heat the water in the tank so that it will boil and blow off. W. D. B.

What you wish to accomplish is, in part at least, defeated by the plan used

In a Position to Know

Gentlemen:

In 1896 I built my first greenhouse, and every year have made some addition to the business, until now we have over fifty thousand feet of glass.

Those who have built their business in this way, from the cold frame up, usually are best to judge the merits of a boiler. I can, therefore, say the two Burnham boilers you installed for us in 1904 have been most satisfactory. We gladly recommend your work.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) J. L. Maull,

in piping. The aim should be to get the water into the heating pipes as quickly as possible after it leaves the boiler. This is best done by carrying the main flow pipes from the boiler directly into the radiating pipes. Usually the hot water is carried from the boiler in a single pipe to the far end of the house and then distributed into the required number of pipes to heat the house, the number varying according to the size of the house, its exposure, the climate in which it is located, and the crops to be grown. Your house has just one-half the amount of pipe necessary to maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in your climate, in severe weather. Then, too, with your present plan one side of the house will receive much more heat than the other, as all the hot pipes are on one side and all the cool ones on the other.

The plan suggested, of carrying the main flow from the boiler to the opposite end of the house and there distributing to all the returns, which can then be arranged parallel to one another, and at the end nearest the boiler collecting all the water in a main return, gives every pipe hot water. Your house on this plan might have one 2½-inch flow from the boiler to the south end and sixteen 1½-inch returns on the side walls or under the benches. The expansion tank should be placed twelve to thirteen feet above the highest point in the system and connected with the main return near the boiler by a ¾-inch pipe. Do not connect the expansion tank to the main flow or force the hot water through a tank, as at present. L. C. C.

A WYOMING VEGETABLE HOUSE.

My hothouse is 16x100 in the clear, built on a south hillside and intended for vegetables, such as lettuce and radishes. I have about 400 feet of 2-inch pipe for return coils and also 400 feet of 1-inch pipe. May I not use it? Would you put the small pipe in front or behind? There is no exposure except the glass and that all slopes one way.

I do not advise the use of 1-inch pipe for hot water heating in maximum length runs, which you have. I fear you will not get good service if you use it. My plan would be, if possible, to exchange the 1-inch pipe for 2-inch pipe. You should have at least seven lines of 2-inch pipe in this house. Both lots you now have are not sufficient to pipe the house by about sixty square feet of radiation. Four hundred lineal feet of 1-inch pipe make only 135 square feet of heating surface, so it is not very economical even in short runs. L. C. C.

A NEW JERSEY LEAN-TO.

I am erecting a lean-to house, 7x54. It is seven feet high at the back and four feet six at the front. It faces east and runs north and south. It is protected from northerly winds by my dwelling house, and has twelve inches of glass at the front and twenty at the back. Would you be good enough to tell me

Protection Is Better Than Insurance

The following item appeared in all the large daily newspapers of the United States, Sept. 6, 1907:

"PLEASANT HILL, MO., September 26, 1907.—A boiler exploded early today in the conservatories of Geo. M. Kellogg, florist, three miles from here, partially destroying the plant and causing damage estimated at $75,000.00. Over half of the plant was saved. The conservatories are among the largest in the west."

It was a steel boiler that exploded and wrought this great loss.

Capitol Boilers are made of cast iron and cannot explode.

With a steel boiler in the greenhouse, or anywhere else, there is always the ever-present contingency of an explosion. With the Capitol Boiler there is the assurance of safety from explosion. Besides the divided sections, the low fuel cost and ease of operation make the Capitol Boiler demand the florists' consideration.

Let us send you the testimony of successful florists who are using Capitol Boilers. Descriptive literature and all information promptly forwarded.

how to arrange hot water pipes for heating this house, and the quantity required to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees in the coldest weather? In one end I propose growing bedding plants, and in the other end carnations in front and sweet peas and asparagus along the back. It gets the sun the whole day long, and is warmly built with double boards. A. P.

My plan for piping such a house as you have would be to carry a 2-inch riser from the boiler high over the outside door in one end. Drop to a point beneath the side bench and place five lines of 2-inch pipe the length of the house; then combine all into a manifold built of tees and a close nipple, and carry a 2-inch return to the boiler. The idea of carrying the riser high is to make head room over the door. Then, by using an expansion tank in the attic and an air valve on the high point in the system, all should work well. L. C. C.

CAN SLEEP IN PEACE.

It will pay any florist who has no need for a night man to employ instead one of the thermostats that ring a bell whenever the temperature goes too high or too low. With one of these the florist can sleep in peace, certain that he will be called in time if things go awry in the greenhouses. Even where a night man is employed one of these devices is an inexpensive guarantee that he will not fall asleep or desert his post. John F. Rupp, Shiremanstown, Pa., put in one of the Parker thermostats last winter, and writes that the feeling of security it gives has been worth a great deal to him and made him an active advocate of the device.

A GENERAL PURPOSE HOUSE.

We are about to erect a greenhouse, which will be 18x35 feet, even-span, eleven feet to the ridge and five feet to the eaves, with twenty-four inches of glass in the sides and glass in both gables. We wish to grow carnations and a general line of bedding stock.

Which way would it be best to have this house run? We prefer to run it east and west, but if there would be any advantage we could run it the other way. We shall use raised benches on the sides, three feet six inches wide, and one center bench six feet six inches wide. We wish to have about one-half of the center bench raised, the other half to be a lar kind of boiler, but will probably use some kind of round or sectional boiler. How much below the greenhouse floor should the boiler be located, and where should the expansion tank be located? We expect to put our boiler in a building located about six feet from the greenhouse, and could put the expansion tank in this building or in the greenhouse, whichever way is preferable. Must the tank be located so as not to be exposed to a freezing temperature? Here, in northwestern Pennsylvania, the temperature is sometimes 20 degrees below zero, but only once in a while. We have zero weather, however, quite frequently. A. E. P.

My preference for general purpose houses is to run them north and south, with the head or boiler house at the north end. Even-span houses get a little more sunshine when set north and south than in any other position.

For a house the size you mention, I should say, use hot water by all means, unless you have gas fuel, so as to regulate the fire in a steam plant automatically. You can use 1½-inch or 2-inch pipe for this house; if you use 2-inch pipe it will require nine lines, eight under the benches and one overhead flow, unless you prefer to place all beneath the benches. If 1½-inch pipe is used it will require twelve pipes under the benches, fed by one 2-inch flow. In a hot water plant all valves should be gate valves. To reduce radiation, place a valve in each end of the pipes under the benches which you wish to put out of commission. This is seldom necessary with hot water, however, as the temperature during mild days can be controlled by firing and by use of the throttle valve on the main flow.

I would place the boiler eighteen inches to three or four feet below the level of the greenhouses. Nothing is lost by a deep pit. Place the expansion tank in the boiler house or on top of it, and give protection. I do not like the idea of a detached boiler house. You will find your workroom unhandy. L. C. C.

Girvin's Handy Cutter

Mr. Florist, if you once get one of these cutters on your finger you will never be without it for many times the price. Just the thing for cutting your carnations, sweet peas, asters, melons, grapes, etc. Why be bothered with a knife or follow the old way of breaking your flowers when a Handy Cutter will do the work better and save you money and time? Don't continue breaking your carnations and thus ruin hundreds of young shoots daily, simply because a knife is unhandy to work with, but try a Handy Cutter. If you are not entirely satisfied with it you can return it and have your money refunded. These cutters are made of spring brass, highly nickel-plated, and contain a removable blade.

DAYTON, OHIO.

The Trade in September.

Taking it on the whole, business throughout the month of September has been fairly good. The month started in well, but about two weeks afterward trade took a decided drop and for about ten days was extremely quiet. After that period a steady increase was noticeable, which continued up to the present time, the demand being fairly good, while at the same time stock has been plentiful.

Roses throughout the month have cropped well; the demand for them has at no time consumed the supply, and at the present time they are holding out well. American Beauties are looking splendid and there is a good demand for them. Brides, Maids and Kaiserins are also looking fine. There have been a few carnations on the market all the month and the supply has steadily increased, until at present there are some exceptionally good ones, considering the time of the year. Asters have been plentiful, but are now scarce and poor in quality.

The weather during the month of September has been exceedingly hot and dry, though recently the nights have been very cool. On September 28 the much needed rain, which we had wished for so many weeks, came and the mercury dropped considerably, making it necessary to fire the boilers in order to keep the greenhouses at the right temperature.

Various Notes.

The Dayton Florists' Club, which has omitted its regular meetings during the summer months, will meet on the first Monday of October, at the store of J. F. Young, on East Fifth street.

Owing to the fact that William Jennings Bryan visited Dayton September 24, Beauties were in good demand, and Mr. Bryan carried away his share.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Lampert, of Xenia, O., visited the Miami Floral Co. last week. R. A. B.

WASHINGTON.

Current Comment.

Weddings, dinners, and the steady demand for funeral work have kept things on the move for the last week, with everything looking good.

Minder Bros. will commence to cut a fine lot of lilies this week. Henry Trail, of Frederick, Md., is cutting some fine chrysanthemums. His Golden Glow could not be better. Other early varieties he is sending in are October Frost, Opah and Monrovia.

J. J. Harty & Co. have opened up for the season.

Visitors this week: E. J. Fancourt, of S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.; Mr. Goudy, of Henry A. Dreer's, and I. Rosnosky, of Michell's, all of Philadelphia, and Mr. Hagemann, of New York. O. O.

ERIE, PA.

The Market.

The theater season has opened again and with it comes the usual hustle in the floral business. Society folks are gradually returning from their summer homes and giving more life to the city.

The local florists are furnishing good roses in Rhea Reid, Queen Beatrice, Maid and Bride. Beauties are also coming on finely. Carnations are improving in quality and quantity.

The weather is variable, some days going back to the temperature of July, while the nights are almost too cool for comfort. Rain is badly needed in this section. Streams which have not gone dry for twenty years have dried out this summer.

Various Notes.

Mrs. A. J. Baur has returned from a two months' visit with relatives in Toledo, O.

The millinery openings are demanding the attention of the local growers.

Miss Jennie Adams, saleslady for the Robb Floral Co., has returned from her vacation.

Fred Wagner and Kenneth Foster, employees of the Baur Floral Co., have returned from their vacations.

Miss Elizabeth Moran is spending her vacation at home with her invalid mother. B. P.

RACINE, WIS.

The Racine Floral Co., which last spring purchased the old Fidler property, on Asylum avenue, has spent several thousand dollars in improvements, including the erection of four additional greenhouses, which are now completed. Two houses are used for carnations and two for roses. Another house is devoted to chrysanthemums, geraniums and assorted plants, and still another contains palms, ferns, tropical plants and Dutch bulbs.

The growing and gardening are under the management of Paul Bork, who for seven years was superintendent of the greenhouses at Oak Grove cemetery, La Crosse. Afterward he was foreman at John Weiland's greenhouses, in Evanston, Ill., and still later was in business for himself. The firm will give special attention to decorations and this department will be under the care of Mrs. E. Miller, who was for several years in charge of the decorating at Hotel Pfister.

The company's city office is about ready for the formal opening.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Max Hildesheim, of the Imperial Seed & Plant Co., arrived last week from his European trip and reports a very stormy passage. His firm expects large shipments of azaleas, nursery stock and seeds at an early date.

Ventilating Apparatus

It is the principles underlying the construction of a machine that count. This, backed by first-class material, made in a mechanical manner, makes friends of purchasers, and with a reasonable price and profit creates a demand. These and other reasons have made it possible for us to have machines in use in 39 states in a little over 4 years' time. Get our estimate; give us a trial.

ADVERTISING

FOR FLORISTS

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

The Important Matter of Copy.

A study of "copy" and the actual preparation of advertising matter naturally precedes the broader subject of the complete campaign. No matter how large the space or the circulation you pay for, or how favorable the rates you secure, you are not getting your money's worth if the "copy" (the text matter of the advertisement) is weak or uninteresting.

Copy must do more than fill space. It must "pull" business—bring results.

Effective copy is never staid and mechanical. It can't be ground out of a hopper. If it could there would be no need to study the problem of salesmanship on paper. You could just purchase good copy as easily as good printing.

Ideas Come With Study.

Retail florists' advertising cannot be too strong, concise and original.

"Original!" you say. "Yes—but how can I be original in writing my ads? I have no originality, and seldom see things with bright ideas."

This is the feeble excuse ventured by many florists for the dryness and commonplaceness of their advertising. Be of good cheer. You need not have any lonesome feeling in this respect, for every advertising writer and expert this country ever produced BEGAN without the bump of originality being previously developed.

The reason is in not being thorough enough—the "hopper" variety is so much easier to produce. Hence its prevalence.

Cultivate the habit of going into the subject as deeply as possible, and soon you will surprise yourself with a multiplicity of ideas which have been with you all the time—but just needed a spark of enthusiasm and interest to bring them forth.

Get an Outside Viewpoint.

It is not enough for the florist to know the inside facts about his particular proposition.

Indeed, strange as it may seem, you may be too close to your own business to realize its strongest advertising points.

It will pay you to cultivate that valuable "outside" attitude—the viewpoint of the disinterested man or woman—your customer. Don't look at the subject entirely from your standpoint. Get a little perspective in your advertising. Put yourself in the other fellow's place.

Emphasize "you" and "your" in the copy, not "we" and "our."

Get the "you" habit in writing your advertising.

It is much more polite—and better business, too.

Don't Be a Copyist.

It is well and good to read the advertising of others for suggestions and ideas—but do not slavishly copy phrases and ideas that seem to fit your case. In doing this you are sacrificing your own personality, which is too strong a factor to entirely disregard. Have initiative. Search your proposition for new ideas. Then express them brightly and with all the literary skill at your command.

Above all, make your advertising interesting. It must be this or it will never hit the mark.

How to Go About It.

As far as the actual preparation of an advertisement is concerned, no fixed rule can be laid down as to detail of method. There are as many different ways of doing it as there are successful advertisement writers.

Probably no two writers go about it in the same way when they sit down to prepare an advertisement. But experience has proved the wisdom of certain methods and has established some general principles.

Study every phase of your proposition thoroughly. Then set down on paper every talking point that occurs to you.

Omit no fact or argument that might possibly be used to advantage. With this list of selling points before you, you have your material ready.

Regular Insertions Recommended.

The next step is to determine the size of space to be used.

In deciding this point, remember that if you haven't an appropriation large enough to warrant the continuous use of fairly large space, it is much better to use a small space regularly and frequently than very large space spasmodically.

If you are planning to run a complete series of newspaper advertisements, each individual advertisement should, if possible, emphasize a different point, although it is well sometimes to summarize other points, the theory being that there are always some readers who have not seen previous advertisements and who may not see later ones.

In case of a pure type display advertisement, that is, one in which no drawing or design cut is used, the next thing is to create a suitable headline for the ad, which should contain the gist of your story.

Very few persons read through the copy of all advertisements—but there are many who see all, or nearly all, of the prominent headlines.

The Headline Important.

So the wise plan is to state your case clearly in the headlines. And if this is sufficiently well presented, the ad is most likely to be read through.

"The meat at the top"—always. It is just as good a rule for advertisements as for news items.

By constant practice you will acquire the knack of telling the whole story in the headlines and thus get a bigger circulation for your announcement—the head at the top and the name of the advertiser at the bottom making in themselves a complete advertisement for the benefit of the nearsighted person and the cursory reader.

The Text.

Having chosen a suitable head, you have the subject of your advertisement. Pick out the selling point or points you wish to develop. Then sit down and write as fast as the ideas come to you. Never mind the length, but just get your ideas down before they take flight.

Give real arguments—good, logical talk, instead of plain, unsupported statements and meaningless brag.

When you have written yourself out, rewrite your composition.

Weed out all superfluous words. Condense—boil it down, but not too much. Never make the mistake of sacrificing clearness to brevity.

Now rewrite your advertisement, using the shortest, simplest and strongest words that come to you.

If you have difficulty in choosing words, have a synonym book at hand—and use it.

Short, easy-reading paragraphs are the best.

There are several reasons why this pruning process is a good thing. It saves valuable space, makes easy reading and permits more effective display.

Value of Illustrations.

The importance of good illustrations should not be overlooked.

In the first place, a good illustration serves as an eye-catcher.

Then, again, it may increase the "pulling" power of the ad fifty per cent—and possibly present an argument in itself.

A good illustration tells its story at a glance, a story that is intelligible to young and old alike, to the educated and the illiterate.

In this connection it is well to remember that there must be a direct and close relation between the illustration and the subject matter of your text. This rule is imperative.

Do not use an illustration that has absolutely no connection with the rest of your ad, for the sake of attracting attention alone. It makes a faulty, commonplace advertisement and savors of the sideshow sort. Furthermore, it is very bad usage and not in keeping with the dignity of the business. Leave this practice to those operating fire sales and "mediocre merchandisers."

Use appropriate illustrations or none at all. A poor illustration is more liable to distract than attract.

It is not necessary for the advertisement writer to be an artist, but he should be able to indicate his idea so that the artist can readily grasp the same and carry it out effectively.

Uniformity in Style.

The regular use of a trade-mark cut in your ads is good, because, besides drawing attention to the notice, it identifies the advertisement so that even if it is not always read, an unconscious influence is exerted upon the mind of the reading public. It helps build up prestige and good will, which are certainly valuable assets to any business.

If you adopt and use continuously a certain distinctive style of type "set up" in your ads you will gain some valuable secondary or indirect advertising. By creating a style of your own you really get more than you pay for, because you get the full benefit of the cumulative effect of all your preceding publicity.

An Illustration.

The following illustration will serve as an example of the plan used in selecting your headline, gathering together your talking points, writing out your ideas as they come to you, the "pruning" process and the final reconstruction of the advertisement.

SEEDS, BULBS AND PLANTS FOR THE GARDEN.

Spring is here once more. The grass is coming through the ground; the buds are bursting on the trees—everything is showing signs of new life.

So now is the time to get your plants in the ground—if you expect good results.

We have the largest and best stock of seeds, bulbs and plants in town.

We have the kind that makes successful gardens.

Our seeds are unsurpassed in quality, being especially grown for us by the largest growers of good seed in the country. They never fail to "make good."

If you want the best results you had better use our kind. We take particular pride in our stock of plants and bulbs, which are superior to any that you may select elsewhere. If you plant ours in your garden this spring you will surely have plenty of beautiful flowers.

Our prices are lower than the lowest. If you want anything for the garden, remember we have everything that is worth having.

The above rewritten:

THE CALL OF THE GARDEN.

Feel that first spring tang in the air? Doesn't it stir you?

Mother earth feels it, too—and bestirs herself to plan her spring wardrobe.

So now is the time for your garden to begin. But—the best of soil—the best of care—the best of luck and the best of weather cannot make a successful garden unless the roots, bulbs, seeds and plants you put in the ground are live and healthy.

It is upon these essentials, as contained in our garden flowers, that we base our claim for your patronage this spring.

If you plant your garden with our seeds, plants, etc., why—just prepare for delight all summer. Yes, we have everything for the garden at most moderate prices.

DUTCH BULBS

PLANTING TIME AGAIN.

Once more the arrival of the Dutch bulbs reminds us that the year is steadily waning, for the planting of these useful winter and spring flowering subjects is suggestive of fall. Owing to depressed trade, the importations of this class of bulbs show a decline compared with a year ago. There will probably be no serious reduction in the numbers planted outdoors. There may, in fact, be an increase, as this branch of bulb culture is becoming more popular yearly, but the unremunerative, not to say ruinous, prices prevailing in the flower markets last winter were discouraging to all specialists in this line, and it is little to be wondered at that they curtailed their purchases for the present season.

We look for more satisfactory prices the coming winter, as the advance guard of trade revivalism seems to have arrived. To the retailer who utilizes about all his output at home, and who brings his bulbs along in little batches, there would seem to be no reason for cutting down the bulb purchases, but specialists who handle big lots of a few kinds have to exercise more caution. The growers who take hold of varieties which have taken shades of color, and which have not been seen much in the markets, will fare better than those who persistently cling to a few overdone, old-time favorites.

Soil for Dutch Bulbs.

The compost for bulbous plants should have been prepared some weeks ago, as advised, and if mixed once or twice should now be in nice condition. If, perchance, some have omitted the preparation of it, we would say that fibrous loam, chopped down, but not too finely, one part; thoroughly decayed cow manure or spent hotbed manure, one part, and leaf-mold and sharp sand, one part, combined, make a satisfactory mixture for this class of plants. The loam should be coarse and never screened. The manure must not on any account be fresh, and in potting or boxing the compost ought never to be pasty. New pots or pans want a thorough soaking in water before using.

We often hear the remark that any old soil will do for bulbs. Do not believe any such nonsense. Lily of the valley is about the only forcing subject which cares naught about the class of material its roots are in, but valley makes no new roots before flowering, depending altogether on the energy stored up in the pips as received. All the regular Dutch bulbs make, or should make, plenty of new roots, so that the compost, if to their liking, makes a wondrous difference in their quality.

Varieties of Tulips and Hyacinths.

Hyacinths, unless for exhibition purposes, need not be of the first size. What are classed as seconds and bedding size are just what commercial growers need. The unnamed mixtures of a number of shades will answer all right for the country florist, but for specialists, who want one decided color, it is best to buy named sorts, like Norma, pink; Grandeur a'Merveille, white; Marie or Baron Van Thuyll, blue, and Robert Steiger, crimson. Double varieties are undesirable. The foregoing sorts are all single.

In tulips, La Reine still remains the most widely popular of forcing tulips. A few others which can be strongly recommended are: Belle Alliance, Cottage Maid, Kaiserkroon, Proserpine, Yellow Prince, Chrysolora, Wouwerman, Mon Tresor (a splendid yellow for forcing), Rose Grisdelin and Vermilion Brilliant, in singles. Among doubles, Couronne d'Or and Murillo are the best. A few well-known tulips, which cannot be recommended for early forcing, are: Scarlet Pottebakker, White Swan, Couleur Cardinal, Joost van Vondel, and Royal Standard.

Varieties of Narcissi.

The French Trumpet Major bulbs will have been started some weeks ago and should come in about the new year, a few even earlier. The best forcing sorts to depend upon in yellow Trumpets are Golden Spur and Henry Irving. One is often sold by the Hollanders for the other. The old double Von Sion, Telamonius plenus, while a somewhat coarse flower, takes well in the markets. Princeps is an inexpensive variety, still much grown; it lacks substance, but is worth growing where it is desired to give a good sized bunch for a low price. Other Trumpet varieties, which sell in a moderate way, are: Emperor, Empress, Victoria and Horsfieldii. Among the medium Trumpet varieties Barri Conspicuous, Sir Watkin and Mrs. Langtry are three of the best. Poeticus and its early flowering variety, ornatus, can hardly be left out of any list of desirable forcing narcissi. It is a great pity that the merits of the medium and short cupped varieties are not more appreciated in the markets, as they are in Europe.

Miscellaneous Bulbs.

The English iris is not so good for forcing as the Spanish varieties. Of the latter, Chrysolora, Thunderbolt, Louise and Formosa are a good quartette. These are always popular at the better class stores in late winter and early spring. Gladiolus Colvillei The Bride, and Blushing Bride, Cardinalis, Peach Blossom and the popular nanus section are all fine for forcing in flats. Sweet-scented jonquils, of which Rugulosus and Campanelle are good, and Polyanthus Narcissus Soleil d'Or and Grand Monarque are acceptable varieties, especially where a local retail trade is done. There are many other Dutch bulbous plants worthy of culture, but commercially they are of small importance.

Storing Bulbs.

The question of properly storing bulbs when once they are in the soil is an important one. Frequently they are stood outdoors covered with soil or ashes and later protected from frost. Good bulbs can be grown treated thus; for the more northerly states, however, we have a decided preference for the protection of a cellar or frame, the former being the best. In such a place the flats or pots will not become saturated with water in case we get a wet fall, and often failures in culture are directly traceable to winter storage in the open. It must, however, be remembered that bulbs should never be buried in cinders or soil directly after they have been watered. Let this covering stay off for a month at least, during which time the bulbs will require one or two additional soakings. Too little water at the roots in the early stages of growth are to be attributed not a few failures in bulb culture.

Plant Early for Forcing.

There is no time lost yet in planting bulbs in the open. In fact, the end of October is early enough for most sections of the United States, but for forcing it is important to get the bulbs into the soil as soon as possible, before they can lose any of their vitality and so that they can be making roots rather than frittering away their strength in bags or boxes. If you cannot pot your bulbs at once, unpack the boxes, loosen the bags and spread out the contents in flats where they are as cool as possible. Keep them away from fire heat. How often do we see bags left tied up until wanted, with the result that often when opened the whole is a network of roots! Therefore, remember that it will not pay to let any of your bulbs get into this condition. Plant early. Water thoroughly and do not attempt any forcing until you are sure pots and flats are full of roots.

LORRAINE BEGONIAS.

Can someone give me information as to what treatment Begonia Gloire de Lorraine should have, in regard to shade, temperature and spraying? I have been told that they should not be sprayed at all, but fail to see how they can be kept clean of mealy bug, etc., without spraying them.

C. B.

At this stage of growth Lorraine begonias should be in a house kept at 55 to 60 degrees at night. The higher temperature will be better if you want plants in good shape for Christmas. Move into a cooler structure when a good number of flowers have opened. A light shade will still be necessary. A heavy shade is not necessary, and is positively harmful. The plants require spraying at least once a day during July and August, but this now may be discontinued. A hand syringe or fine sprayer on the hose should be used. Do not use the full force of the hose without a spray nozzle, or you will break many shoots. If you still have a lot of bugs, use a spray nozzle even now to clean them.

A THREE DOZEN ROSE BUNCH.

Eugene S. Myers, of Myers Bros., Altoona, Pa., made the casket bouquet shown in the accompanying illustration and says that if anyone can make a bigger show with thirty-six Bride roses he would like to see the picture of the piece. Dagger ferns were used for the bottom of the piece, and quite a little Asparagus plumosus was worked in, so that the finished piece measured five feet six inches from end to end. With the addition of the bow of chiffon it looked like a whole lot for the money when the customer paid $12 for it. Myers Bros. have been in business twenty-nine years, doing any sort of work in cut flowers or plants, but say they have never turned out a more satisfactory piece with as little material. Can anybody beat it?

SUGGESTIONS FOR WINDOWS.

Leave Room for Imagination.

Upon an anniversary holiday, convention or some other special occasion it is usually advisable to put in an appropriate window decoration. But the way in which special occasions are pictured is sometimes not beyond criticism. In selecting and executing the emblem illustrative of interesting events or symbolizing certain sentiments, do not try to cover the whole ground, as it were. Suppose it is a badge that you propose to illustrate. If it is intricate do not try to reproduce the whole thing. Choose some significant part and work that out clearly, ignoring minute details. Otherwise the result would resemble the efforts of the would-be story-teller who gives every little detail of dialogue and incident, leaving nothing to the imagination of the listener. Have connection rather a little far-fetched than too evident. Avoid vagueness, but give some room for study. However, this point can be better illustrated than described.

Suppose there is a convention of some railroad organization in town and you lettering or inscription. Make the piece so distinct that signs are not necessary.

"Musical" Windows.

Take another example: Suppose there is a prominent musical event on. Don't make a piano. It would be uncouth. Make a violin or banjo and lay a musical score beside it. Still better, make the score. A scroll of sweet alyssum or candytuft, with dark chenille or black immortelles for lines, and single flowers with their stems for notes, would be a good representation. Detach the scroll from the easel and lay it down. Or illustrate some well-known song. Put a series of them in the window; for instance, the "Rosary." Some solid flowers fastened on a heavy violet cord would serve for the beads and the cross could be attached, and the whole laid on a background of soft fabric. Announce your intention of running the series and give a box of violets or roses as a prize for the person who guesses the largest number of names of the songs.

When the fishing season opens, if your locality affords any special attraction in that line, use one of the water windows. Have a quiet pool under some hanging foliage, a convenient tree-trunk, a group of gay flowers in the front, some of which bend over and mirror themselves in the water, and out through them thrust a fishing rod and line, but no fisherman in sight.

If your city is a center for millinery jobbing interests, in the fall or spring season make a hat of some one of the late extreme styles. Politics, local or national, afford good opportunities for suggestive decorations.

In the landscape class another series of interesting windows can be attempted with some extra outdoor work or tactful borrowing. Announce that you will picture a number of different birds' nests and their surroundings. Get hold of the abandoned nests and a branch of their favorite trees or bushes. Place each one in the window as the case requires; if on the ground, so much the better. When possible have the eggs and the stuffed bird also. Run the series as long as the different nests are procurable and interest lives. Have different flowers in each window, and plenty of them. Complete the series with a hen's nest in a barrel. Give a box of flowers or a plant as a prize to the one who guesses the correct names of the most kinds of nests. Withal, keep flowers and plants always prominently in view and impress observers that the other attractions are only leaders towards the main issue.

GERTRUDE BLAIR.

WREATH OF GALAX.

The accompanying illustration is a wreath in the happiest vein of C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia. The wreath is made entirely of galax leaves, while carnations of one variety are loosely arranged over one-half the wreath, the flowers being arranged carelessly, to the best possible advantage. White is preferable in this arrangement, but Enchantress may also be used effectively.

PHIL.

A PRIZE DESIGN.

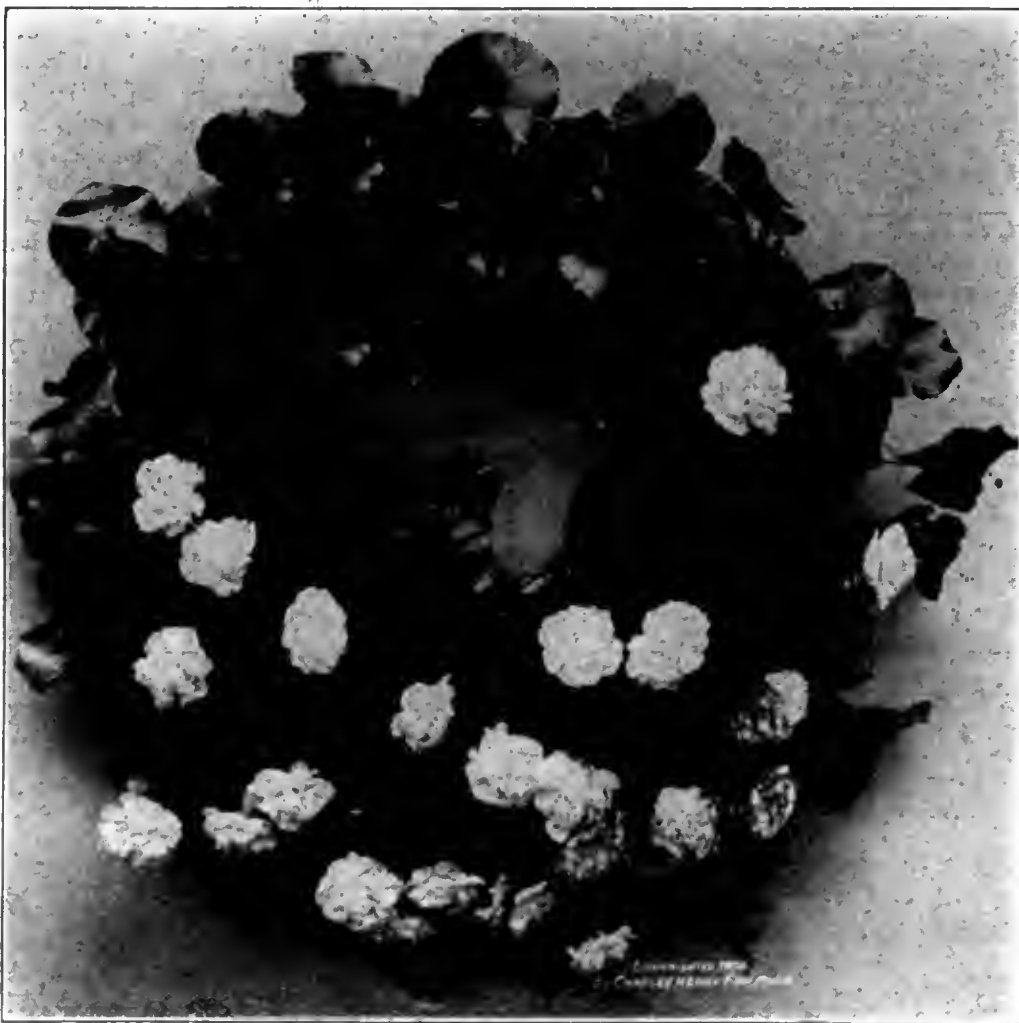

The illustration opposite is a reproduction of a photograph of the design with which Lozier's, of Des Moines, recently secured first premium at the Iowa State Fair. It is said John T. Temple, the judge, commented on it as the finest piece he ever had seen at the fair.

This was a large standing wreath, made solid with white asters and trimmed with cattleyas, Killarney roses, Easter lilies and valley. The large cluster of valley on one side was especially attractive. The base was made of green and lilies.

WINTERING ALTERNANTHERAS.

Alternanthera in variety is still grown and sold every spring in large quantities, in spite of the fact that carpet bedding, so called, is not nearly so popular as it once was. Some have considerable trouble in keeping alternanthera through the winter. This difficulty is due in part, perhaps, to the plants being continuously subjected to too low a temperature, and the question of how this can be avoided is a subject that will doubtless be of some interest to those who have not had extended experience.

I have of late years taken up out of the ground outdoors, at about this time or a little later, plants in numbers fully sufficient to insure ample stock for propagation. These I usually start early in February. But what I want to get at is my method of keeping the plants from the time they are taken out of the ground until they are broken up or cuttings taken of them. I put the old plants in flats, cramming as many into a flat as possible. Until I have all the plants a flat will contain in place, only enough

wish to compliment the occasion, and indirectly benefit your trade in that direction. At first you might be inclined to make a locomotive and tender, but you groan inwardly to think of the outlay of time and material. Don't do it. Make a brake wheel. That's symbol enough, and a better piece in every way than such a monstrosity as a locomotive. If you want size, make the brake wheel large and give it an appropriate setting. Avoid

For the Naturalist.

Neither in landscape nor water windows should every detail be worked out minutely. By remembering that there is much to be crowded into a small space at best, one's better judgment can easily discern what details are encumbering. Don't continue catchy or sensational subjects too long or offer them too frequently. The really beautiful things keep attention permanently.

soil to cover the bottom is put in. Then the plants are sheared hard back and the refuse carefully swept off. Finally, as much soil as possible is worked in among the plants and between them and the edges of the flats, for their sustenance through the winter.

I have found that by this method the plants kept much better than plants usually did when a smaller number were carefully placed in flats previously filled with soil.

Another point in favor of the method of which I now write is that a vastly larger number, relatively, can be kept in any given space than by the other method. Thus, if conditions are at all favorable to growth, no difficulty will be met in getting plenty of cuttings in early spring, or in late winter if they are then needed. If propagation is done by breaking up the wintered stock, that which has been carried through successfully in but a few flats will give material enough to work on even when a great number of plants is required.

A good watering should be given the plants when put in flats, and thereafter they should be kept on the dry side until they are brought into action again. M.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

Two great horticultural exhibitions are announced for 1910. In Belgium, many who took an active part in the Ghent Quinquennial are in harness again for an international exhibition in Brussels in 1910. A large and influential committee has already announced its program.

Just across the frontier from Belgium, the Dutch bulb growers are arranging for a six weeks' show of bulbous flowering plants from the beginning of April till the middle of May, to be held in Haarlem. The event is to celebrate the jubilee of the Dutch Bulb Growers' Association. It was founded in 1860 with about 150 members, and is now a strong society with 2,800 members, a trade journal of its own and a weekly bulb market, a committee of arbiters for dealing with disputes, and a floral committee for judging novelties at its shows, held frequently during the flowering season. The Haarlem city council has granted the picturesquely situated city park as a site for the show, and the intention is to lay out a large portion of it as a bulb garden. Haarlem is always a delightful place to visit in April and May, and attracts visitors from all parts of the globe when the bulbs are in bloom. The floral fete of 1910 is still a long way ahead, but it is worth making a note of, with a view to planning your trip to include it if possible. From what I know of Haarlem and the Hollanders, you will never regret the visit.

The peony-flowered dahlias introduced by H. Hornsveld, Baarn, Holland, continue to increase in popularity, throughout Germany, England and Holland, as decorative garden plants. A few of the varieties are good for cutting for market, but it is on the plants that the flowers are seen to greatest advantage. Mr. Hornsveld is still busily engaged in hybridizing and leaves the distribution of his novelties to Warnaar & Co., Sassenheim, Holland, and Gt. van Waveren & Kruijff, Sassenheim. The best new ones that I have noted this season are: Geisha, a distinct, peculiar orange red with yellow center, large flowers with two or three rows of petals; Andrew Premium Wreath at Iowa State Fair.

Carnegie, salmon pink, shaded bronze, elegant habit, flowers on stout stems; Bertha von Suttner, salmon pink, shaded yellow, flowers very large, compact and sturdy growth; Sneewitje, or in plain English Snowwhite, a lovely flower, which should be in every collection. The best of previous years' introductions include H. Hornsveld, Glory of Baarn, Queen Wilhelmina, King Leopold, Duke Henry, Queen Emma, and last, but not the least important, Germania, a perfect gem in the garden. In the course of a conversation a day or two ago, Mr. Hornsveld mentioned further surprises in store for next season.

Belgium growers are experiencing quite a slump in the prices of Araucaria excelsa. All sizes up to three feet can be picked up at probably the lowest prices on record. Reports are current in Germany and England that the common spruce Christmas trees are scarce and that prices will be high, so it looks as if the Belgians might clear off a larger number of araucarias than usual for the Christmas trade. Prices may stiffen before then and the growers are devoutly praying that they will, for present rates are ruinous to them, although highly favorable to buyers. Azalea Indica is also fairly plentiful, and present conditions point to a surplus on hand at the end of the season in many of the nurseries. The dwarf growing and free flowering Hexe is an exception. This is in great demand and supplies are short.

valley cultures are varied. In some districts the crowns have done well; in others they have suffered from continuous rains. One grower, near Hamburg, says that prospects are good, the inquiries being equal to those of former years, with prices firm.

J. C. Schmidt, of Erfurt, has a new climbing rose of the Wichuraiana type, said to be of a violet-blue color. Flower of Fairfield, the everblooming crimson Rambler, is giving a good account of itself in several places, and there are fairly large stocks of it in several of the nurseries of Boskoop, Holland.

J. Cocker & Sons, Aberdeen, Scotland, have a sport from Dorothy Perkins, a most distinct and beautiful shell-pink flower. At the National Rose Society's autumn show, in London, this firm carried off the premier prize for the fourth year in succession.

Horticulture at the Franco-British Exhibition, London, has been quite a feature, French and English firms combining to beautify the extensive grounds. The jury is now at work, but the awards are not yet known. I hear, however, that J. Carter & Co., London, and Sutton & Sons, Reading, are bracketed for highest honors.

The old established and extensive nursery business of Richard Smith & Co., Limited, Worcester, England, is in financial difficulties. In addition to an extensive home trade, they also did an export business and the head of the firm made a tour of the United States last year.

WREATH OF GALAX.

The accompanying illustration is a wreath in the happiest vein of C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia. The wreath is made entirely of galax leaves, while carnations of one variety are loosely arranged over one-half the wreath, the flowers being arranged carelessly, to the best possible advantage. White is preferable in this arrangement, but Enchantress may also be used effectively.

A PRIZE DESIGN.

The illustration opposite is a reproduction of a photograph of the design with which Lozier's, of Des Moines, recently secured first premium at the Iowa State Fair. It is said John T. Temple, the judge, commented on it as the finest piece he ever had seen at the fair.

This was a large standing wreath, made solid with white asters and trimmed with cattleyas, Killarney roses, Easter lilies and valley. The large cluster of valley on one side was especially attractive. The base was made of green and lilies.

WINTERING ALTERNANTHERAS.

Alternanthera in variety is still grown and sold every spring in large quantities, in spite of the fact that carpet bedding, so called, is not nearly so popular as it once was. Some have considerable trouble in keeping alternanthera through the winter. This difficulty is due in part, perhaps, to the plants being continuously subjected to too low a temperature, and the question of how this can be avoided is a subject that will doubtless be of some interest to those who have not had extended experience.

I have of late years taken up out of the ground outdoors, at about this time or a little later, plants in numbers fully sufficient to insure ample stock for propagation. These I usually start early in February. But what I want to get at is my method of keeping the plants from the time they are taken out of the ground until they are broken up or cuttings taken of them. I put the old plants in flats, cramming as many into a flat as possible. Until I have all the plants a flat will contain in place, only enough wish to compliment the occasion, and indirectly benefit your trade in that direction. At first you might be inclined to make a locomotive and-tender, but you groan inwardly to think of the outlay of time and material. Don't do it. Make a brake wheel. That's symbol enough, and a better piece in every way than such a monstrosity as a locomotive. If you want size, make the brake wheel large and give it an appropriate setting. Avoid

Neither in landscape nor water windows should every detail be worked out minutely. soil to cover the bottom is put in. Then the plants are sheared hard back and the refuse carefully swept off. Finally, as much soil as possible is worked in among the plants and between them and the edges of the flats, for their sustenance through the winter.

I have found that by this method the plants kept much better than plants usually did when a smaller number were carefully placed in flats previously filled with soil.

Another point in favor of the method of which I now write is that a vastly larger number, relatively, can be kept in any given space than by the other method. Thus, if conditions are at all favorable to growth, no difficulty will be met in getting plenty of cuttings in early spring, or in late winter if they are then needed. If propagation is done by breaking up the wintered stock, that which has been carried through successfully in but a few flats will give material enough to work on even when a great number of plants is required.

A good watering should be given the plants when put in flats, and thereafter they should be kept on the dry side until they are brought into action again. M.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

Two great horticultural exhibitions are announced for 1910. In Belgium, many who took an active part in the Ghent Quinquennial are in harness again for an international exhibition in Brussels in 1910. A large and influential committee has already announced its program.

Just across the frontier from Belgium, the Dutch bulb growers are arranging for a six weeks' show of bulbous flowering plants from the beginning of April till the middle of May, to be held in Haarlem. The event is to celebrate the jubilee of the Dutch Bulb Growers' Association. It was founded in 1860 with about 150 members, and is now a strong society with 2,800 members, a trade journal of its own and a weekly bulb market, a committee of arbiters for dealing with disputes, and a floral committee for judging novelties at its shows, held frequently during the flowering season. The Haarlem city council has granted the picturesquely situated city park as a site for the show, and the intention is to lay out a large portion of it as a bulb garden. Haarlem is always a delightful place to visit in April and May, and attracts visitors from all parts of the globe when the bulbs are in bloom. The floral fete of 1910 is still a long way ahead, but it is worth making a note of, with a view to planning your trip to include it if possible. From what I know of Haarlem and the Hollanders, you will never regret the visit.

The peony-flowered dahlias introduced by H. Hornsveld, Baarn, Holland, continue to increase in popularity, throughout Germany, England and Holland, as decorative garden plants. A few of the varieties are good for cutting for market, but it is on the plants that the flowers are seen to greatest advantage. Mr. Hornsveld is still busily engaged in hybridizing and leaves the distribution of his novelties to Waraer & Co., Sassenheim, Holland, and Gt. van Waveren & Kruijff, Sassenheim. The best new ones that I have noted this season are: Geisha, a distinct, peculiar orange red with yellow center, large flowers with two or three rows of petals; Andrew Premium Wreath at Iowa State Fair.

Carnegie, salmon pink, shaded bronze, elegant habit, flowers on stout stems; Bertha von Suttner, salmon pink, shaded yellow, flowers very large, compact and sturdy growth; Sneeuwitje, or in plain English Snowwhite, a lovely flower, which should be in every collection. The best of previous years' introductions include H. Hornsveld, Glory of Baarn, Queen Wilhelmina, King Leopold, Duke Henry, Queen Emma, and last, but not the least important, Germania, a perfect gem in the garden. In the course of a conversation a day or two ago, Mr. Hornsveld mentioned further surprises in store for next season.

Belgium growers are experiencing quite a slump in the prices of Araucaria excelsa. All sizes up to three feet can be picked up at probably the lowest prices on record. Reports are current in Germany and England that the common spruce Christmas trees are scarce and that prices will be high, so it looks as if the Belgians might clear off a larger number of araucarias than usual for the Christmas trade. Prices may stiffen before then and the growers are devoutly praying that they will, for present rates are ruinous to them, although highly favorable to buyers. Azalea Indica is also fairly plentiful, and present conditions point to a surplus on hand at the end of the season in many of the nurseries. The dwarf growing and free flowering Hexe is an exception. This is in great demand and supplies are short.

valley cultures are varied. In some districts the crowns have done well; in others they have suffered from continuous rains. One grower, near Hamburg, says that prospects are good, the inquiries being equal to those of former years, with prices firm.

J. C. Schmidt, of Erfurt, has a new climbing rose of the Wichuraiana type, said to be of a violet-blue color. Flower of Fairfield, the everblooming crimson Rambler, is giving a good account of itself in several places, and there are fairly large stocks of it in several of the nurseries of Boskoop, Holland.

J. Cocker & Sons, Aberdeen, Scotland, have a sport from Dorothy Perkins, a most distinct and beautiful shell-pink flower. At the National Rose Society's autumn show, in London, this firm carried off the premier prize for the fourth year in succession.

Horticulture at the Franco-British Exhibition, London, has been quite a feature. French and English firms combining to beautify the extensive grounds. The jury is now at work, but the awards are not yet known. I hear, however, that J. Carter & Co., London, and Sutton & Sons, Reading, are bracketed for highest honors.

The old established and extensive nursery business of Richard Smith & Co., Limited, Worcester, England, is in financial difficulties. In addition to an extensive home trade, they also did an export business and the head of the firm made a tour of the United States last year. BEE.

ROSES

TO CARRY OVER TEA ROSES.

Will you kindly inform me how to care for tea roses? I have several hundreds I wish to take up and carry over, to be set out in the spring. I do not wish to force them during the winter, but just keep them in good shape for the spring. F. W. M.

Assuming that these roses are just now in the bench, they should be well ripened before lifting. This can easily be done by withholding or diminishing the supply of water until the wood is ripe. During this process, give plenty of air and do not let red spider denude the plants of their leaves.

Lift the plants carefully, leaving a good ball of earth on the roots. Store them in some cold pit or cellar until spring. They will require periodical inspection, so that none of the plants shall become too dry.

After planting out, when the new growths are well in sight they can be pruned. RIBES.

ROSES ON WALLS.

While freely admitting the unsurpassed beauty of roses when in bloom and, because of that, their desirability for planting on rough walls, some people raise the point that during a great part of summer they do not fully answer their purpose as a covering, and that they are not, of themselves, very decorative in effect.

To get rid of this objection, Bignonia radicans, which comes into bloom much later than most climbing roses, should be planted on such walls alternately with the roses. The bignonia has density of foliage to make up for the lack of it in the roses, while the flowers of the former are by no means insignificant or inconspicuous. M.

WHITE FLIES AND SCALE.

We are troubled here with some sort of small white flies. They are numerous and will cover one all over under trees or shrubbery. They also make a scale on the branches. Please advise me how to get rid of them and also the scale. They are, of course, in the greenhouse. I am using tobacco stems by soaking these in the water and sprinkling with the water. J. T.

If these white flies have any connection with the scale insects, which I very much doubt, they are only males and cannot do harm to the plants, as they have no mouths and only live a few days, their sole function as perfect insects being to fertilize the females. They usually emerge early in the season in the form of minute flies, with the head, thorax and abdomen distinct and well formed, two delicate wings, six legs and usually two slender filaments at the hinder end of the body.

Artificial scale remedies are many. Among the most useful are kerosene emulsion, fir tree oil, whale oil soap, etc. Any of these, diluted to the proper strength and applied to the bark with a stiff brush, will soon clean the plants.

It would have been more satisfactory had this querist sent a few specimens of both flies and scale for inspection.

RHEA REID WINS OUT.

The E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., last week received a cable from Secretary Forestier, Paris, France, announcing the awarding of the grand prize, the gold medal of the municipality, to Rose Rhea Reid as being the premier variety among some eighty-four sorts entered for the international contest.

Last spring the first judging was held at the Bagatelle gardens, Paris, and at that time the Hill Co. had another rose, Admiral Evans, that scored as high as Reid, but on the second, held last month, the Rhea Reid rose received such a high rating that the judges decided it was entitled to the grand prize. In the first judging Lyon-Rose scored ten points, being the only variety to rank so high.

FRANKLIN, MASS.—M. I. Van Leeuwen, of the Continental Nurseries, has begun work on a new greenhouse, 50x200 feet.

THE MILDEW MACHINE.

If anyone knows mildew, it should be Benjamin Dorrance, for he has been battling with it since 1882, and it surely is of prime interest that he thinks he has found a means of destroying this great affliction of rose plants and therefore of rose growers. The Dorrance mildew machine is shown in the accompanying illustration. It has been used at the Dorrance rose houses, Dorranceton, Pa., for five years.

"Mildew," says Mr. Dorrance, "is the bane of plant growers, whether for flowers or fruit. Being a parasitic fungus, having as its host the plants of our greenhouses, its control is one of the vital problems confronting the grower. The problem is rather a peculiar one, since both are plants—death to the one may mean death to the other. Mildew yields to the fumes of sulphur, and is more susceptible than the host. Hence the question becomes one of getting the sulphur fumes into the house when, where and of the strength needed. Three methods have been used, painting sulphur on steam pipes; vaporizing it in one of the various devices, home-made or bought, or dusting it on the plants themselves. Painting the pipes is not satisfactory—the fumes go all through the house, fading or defacing the blooms; they are in the house for a long time, and are equally distributed in all parts, whether needed or not; steam must be used to start them. When mildew is rife during the summer, steam is a detriment. The different vaporizers, ignoring the fact that sulphur, when heated to the kindling point, will burst into flame, have in them a great source of danger, and being stationary, if they do 'go wrong and take fire,' much damage is done before they are discovered or can be put out. When dusted on the plants it is necessary, to make the fumes effective, to take off all ventilation and raise the temperature greatly.

"Taking all these into consideration, we worked out a device which makes mildew and its attendant evils for us things of the past. It is a lantern-like affair of two compartments. In the upper, the sulphur is put; in the lower, the lighted alcohol lamp. When the sulphur begins to melt, the lamp is put out and the sulphur lighted. The fumes of the burning sulphur are given off through the many perforations, and the strength controlled by opening and closing the door of the sulphur compartment. When the smell of the burning sulphur is noticeable, we are ready for the fumigation. We shut the ventilators in the house and go to and fro in the walks, swinging the burner as if it were a censer, until the fumes are distributed where wanted. Then we carry the burner outside, set it down, and go back and open the ventilators. The deed is done, the mildew killed. We can make the fumigation strong or light as we please, all over the house, or simply where the mildew was. One tablespoonful of sulphur and the same amount of alcohol will fumigate a house 20x150. Fifteen minutes will cover the whole time of fumigation, from the closing of the ventilators to the opening again.

"It is not a toy, but a device of unusual ability to do its own definite work and do it well. It must be handled as such, given only into the hands of competent and intelligent men, not weeding boys and apprentices. Burning sulphur in a greenhouse is fatal to the stock, but we ignite our sulphur before we go into the house and have the fumes in strict control. We do not let every lunk-head use the burner. It needs discretion, your nose and common sense. We do not use the burner when there is moisture on the plants. We keep the burner moving and do not set it down in the house."

The Dorrance firm states that so many inquiries have been received from rose growers who have heard of the mildew machine that they can not get them made fast enough to supply their friends.

MINNESOTA FLORISTS.

The Twin Cities Florists' and Gardeners' Club recently was reorganized as the Minnesota State Florists' Association and incorporated under the laws of the state. The meetings are held on the third Tuesday of each month at Columbia hall, 1929 University avenue, St. Paul, at 8 p. m. All persons professionally engaged in floriculture or horticulture are eligible for membership. The annual dues are $5, payable semi-annually in advance. The secretary is S. D. Dysinger, 20 West Fifth street, St. Paul.

NAME OF BEGONIA.

I have a begonia that is different from any other that I have ever seen. I would like to know if it is a freak or if there is a variety like it. I had a Beefsteak begonia that threw out one leaf that was different from the rest and I made leaf cuttings of it, and now have three plants true to the leaf I made cuttings from. I hardly know how to describe it. The leaf and growth of plant are the same as in the Beefsteak, only the circumference of the leaf is fuzzy and ruffled. It reminds me of the way I have seen mother fasten the upper crust on a pie by taking the dough between thumb and finger and turning it almost crosswise of the pie. This ruffling of the edge is about one inch in width and is quite full, making the edge of the leaf look as if little leaves were growing crosswise of the big leaf. L. C. B.

The begonia you speak of is quite sporty and not infrequently gives plants with variations such as you describe. We do not know of any named variety of B. manicata showing just the characteristics of your sport. C. W.

SEASONABLE ADVICE.

The Unseasonably Warm Weather.

Owing to the weather we have been having, the grower of violets has had to exercise unusual care lest he should later come to sudden grief. The warm weather and cloudless days, with the watering and care that you naturally gave them, caused them to make a luxuriant growth, but herein lies the trouble, unless you took much care to have the growth properly hardened off so that the plants did not receive a sudden check when our unseasonable weather suddenly left us and the mercury quickly went down.

While water cannot be withheld during such hot weather, still it must be used with great judgment, so that when a sudden cold spell drops down on us we will not be caught napping and find our soil too wet. Such a condition is more than likely to give the plants a check in growth, and then look out, for you will be liable to have various troubles and one of the worst is spot, which will be quite likely to attack a house at such a time, and if it does—well, if you have never seen it work before, you will be astonished at the rapidity with which it can clean out a house.

Again, there must be air, and plenty of it, fresh and pure. Do not be afraid of your ventilation.

The First Few Blooms.

Of course, about this time you will begin to have a few blooms, but unless you have a special demand for them thus early, you had better keep the buds picked off and not let the plants go to blooming for some time yet, as they will not be of first quality and the plants will be the better for removing the blooms until you want them to come into flower, which will not be much before the mums are off the floor.

It is the violet grower that always has to be on the alert, even more than the grower of any other kind of plants, lest he be caught when he least expects it, and dire is the result. It is a constant watch of air, water, sun, ventilation, disease, bugs, etc. Yes, he even has often to cut his dreams in two at night to go and look after them.

The Lucky Novice.

Oh, yes, you earn your money and ought to have more than you do, but your next-door neighbor sees the flowers, and incidentally smells them, and straightway thinks you have a little gold mine, and that he ought to open a mine, too. So the next year, or perhaps it was this year, he builds a house and stocks it, and, like nearly every novice, he has good luck with them—all by chance—and the result is there are two violets now to be sold where before there was only one, and you get half the price for your one that you did previously, as he has to have half of the money that there is in your place to be spent for violets. What is the result?

Oh, you both eat shredded wheat and drink Postum, and one or the other soon looks for some other flower to grow. Hard, do I hear you say? Well, you ask any grower of several years' experience and see what he says. If he does not agree with me, you can lay it to my sore throat that is with me to-night.

This was not the strain I was going to write in tonight, but really there is more truth than poetry in what I have said. Violets are a peculiar flower to grow, and never to be trusted if you wish to be successful with them. But more anon. R. E. SHUPHELT.

good fibrous loam, mixed with one-fourth sharp sand and sifted through a one-fourth-inch sieve.

I fill my flat two and one-half inches deep and press down tight with a brick. I dibble the cuttings in two inches apart each way, after trimming all the large leaves, so that light and air can work between them. I then prepare a place either south or north of a greenhouse or wall, so that they get the morning sun and are shaded from the afternoon sun. I make this place level, put my flats there side by side, give one good watering and then forget them for ten days. Put your flats, dry, on the cold, level ground, and water them thoroughly afterward. The water soaks down through them, and the earth under the flats will keep damp until they are rooted. So it is essential that the roots of all the cuttings should go down deeply, to the bottom of the box, and if the weather is very dry, as it was this fall, it is easy work to water the ground around your flats and a little on the leaf. It is also well to turn the flats around, as the ones nearer the wall will root first.

You can keep these flats out until quite late and a cold spell will not hurt them, unless there is a hard frost, and from such they can be easily protected. When you do take them in you will have large, stout cuttings, and by pinching at intervals they will make stocky plants with little trouble. When you are ready to pot, you can part these plants in layers from the flats and break the soil in pieces, by giving a little water before removing. They will be ready for 3-inch or 4-inch pots.

This is the plan used by nearly all old country florists, only they do not pot the cuttings, but bed them out in spring from the flats and plant them closer together and slanting.

I submit herewith a photograph of some geraniums that are rooted. These cuttings were made August 23 or 24. I cannot see any misses to speak of; they are all well rooted.

In greenhouse propagation I lime and cleanse my bench and put on three inches of clean, sharp sand, sprinkled and beat down with a brick. Each two or three SUCCESSFUL PROPAGATION.

In two articles which appeared in the REVIEW of September 17, one written by M. M. L. and the other by E. A. Muchow, on the rooting or propagation of geraniums, there were references to remarks made by me at the Iowa florists' convention at Des Moines, August 26, and published in the REVIEW of September 3. As the geranium was not my topic at the convention, and as my time was limited, I did not think it necessary to take up the time of other members. But as Mr. Muchow has requested a more explanatory discussion on this subject, I find it my duty to answer on a more minute scale.

As success in the growing of all species of plants from cuttings is greatly in the hands of the operator, where one fails the others may be successful. And there are methods which, if strictly carried out, will hold good anywhere. It is with me immaterial whether I use flats of soil and sand outside, or all sand inside. In either way, I will root from seventy-five to ninety-five per cent of geranium cuttings, and sometimes, if extra care is taken, I get them all. And in this I am not alone, for all the trouble with geranium cuttings damping off is due to water or a leaky roof, or to a tight bench and lack of drainage.

Geraniums in the field should be planted far enough apart so that they will not crowd each other. They ought to be gone through once or twice during August, and all the straight, tender shoots trimmed back. This will cause them to make more sturdy cuttings later.

If my cuttings are scarce I commence taking a batch in the last part of August; that gives me a better batch the second week of September. Then, if I am ready two weeks or so later, I prepare my propagation bench inside and root them there.

The soil I use for flats outside is a rows of cuttings are watered thoroughly as I put them in. If the weather is hot and clear, I spray lightly on the leaves the first two or three days. That is all for ten days, and by that time they will have roots. If on a shady bench, I keep water away.

Now, if there is any better way discovered, let us hear it. We are all learning, but, alas, I am afraid that there are many of us Episcopalians, for we "leave undone the things that we ought to do, and do the things that we ought not to do," and there is no help for us.

PHYSOSTEGIA VIRGINICA.

Physostegia Virginia, commonly known as the Texas heath, is a useful summer perennial, flowering from the last of July until September. It is of easy culture, either by seed or root division, and florists doing a retail business will find it useful. For wreath-making it is good and it makes an attractive vase when cut with long stems. In Boston it has gained considerable popularity as a market flower. The illustration shows a wreath and vase exhibited at a recent show in Boston by the F. W. Fletcher Co., Auburndale. The variety is P. Virginia grandiflora, the flowers being much larger than in the type.

PROTECTING BIG HYDRANGEAS.

Newport is famous for excellence in many things horticulturally, and deservedly so. The specimen hydrangeas grown there in the open ground are by common consent granted to be equal, if not superior, to the best in any other locality. These hydrangeas are not taken indoors for winter protection. That is, the large specimens, for which the place is famed, are not. Those grown in tubs are stored in cellars and storehouses.

These smaller plants of hydrangeas are admirably adapted for various forms of decoration, but it must be admitted that to realize what hydrangeas are at their best they must be seen growing in the open ground, undisturbed for years. It is only when thus grown that such splendid specimens, many of them standing eight feet high and crowned gloriously with hundreds of flowers of the bluest of blue, can be expected.

There is a good deal of work connected with the protection of such plants, but their prominence as decorative features makes them well worthy of all the time given to them.

On approach of frost, every gardener in Newport who boasts of his hydrangeas lets other work, be it ever so urgent, stand, and hastens to prepare the hydrangeas for winter. This he commences to do by stripping the plants of all foliage. Then, if the plants are very large, but more especially in cases of specimen plants, the wood is tied securely by means of rope or stout twine, beginning at the base of each plant and finishing at the top, so that, when the work of tying is completed, the plants have the appearance of conical bundles of twigs.

Four upright posts are next driven into the ground, in close proximity to the plants. To these posts one or more boards are nailed at the base, and the space thus enclosed is filled with dry soil. Then the operation of nailing on boards and adding soil is repeated until the plants are completely covered except a small space at the top, which also is covered eventually.

For smaller plants, and for plants grown in continuous rows, a somewhat different method is practiced. It consists in tying the wood of one plant down to that of another, and so on to the end, then covering the plants with dry soil to the depth of fifteen or eighteen inches. The soil used in covering the plants is usually dug from both sides of the row of plants to be protected. By doing this, ditches are made, which add to the security of the plants by affording means for the surface water to pass away from them during a period when excess of moisture at their roots would be very injurious.

BRITISH NURSERYMEN CONVENE

At Bush Hill Park and Other Places.

A large gathering of British nurserymen, numbering over 100, assembled during last week for the annual conference of the Horticultural Trades' Association of Great Britain and Ireland.

This year the time was spent in the district of London. On the opening day the party took a train for Bush Hill Park, the headquarters of Hugh Low & Co., the morning being occupied in the glass department, which comprises ten acres of palms, carnations, pot roses, vines, figs, etc. Here, also, much interest was taken in the hardwood plants, known as "New Holland plants."

The fruit tree and rose department, of about 100 acres, then received the attention of the visitors. One field, containing trained trees only, caused much comment, the standard trained forms being so extensively grown that one wondered whence came the demand.

Cordon trained currants and gooseberries, also standards, proved that there is a demand for these unusual forms. Universal regret was expressed that the new fruit, the Lowberry, figured in the Gardeners' Chronicle, was past fruit.

The rose which caused so much comment when exhibited at the White City, the uniquely colored Lyon rose, was in bloom from plants budded this season. This variety is a strong grower and the blooms are of fine form, the color a blending of Marechal Niel and Killarney.

After lunch at the nurseries, a move was made to the more distant grounds at Forty Hill, Enfield, where standard and pyramid fruit trees and dwarf and standard roses seemed to occupy the whole space. The party then proceeded to Chestnut, on a visit to the Messrs. Paul, whose collections of choice and rare flowering shrubs took some time to examine. The roses and fruit trees were then inspected. This completed a busy day, and all were ready for the tea provided by the Messrs. Paul.

The remaining two days were spent in useful work in the nurseries of Messrs. Wm. Paul, Rochford and Veitch, the final visit being paid to Hampton Court.

WOONSOCKET, R. I.—On the evening of September 26, fire did $1,000 damage at the greenhouse of Jonas Brook.

SAGINAW, MICH.—In the windows of the Wm. Roethke Floral Co. two new varieties of gladioli have recently been displayed. The plants were originated by Frederick H. Stevens, and are the result of about eleven years of persistent efforts in hybridizing. One of the varieties is described as a delicate and perfect lavender, and the other is said to be a beautiful, waxy white.

SEASONABLE CULTURE.

Feeding.

Great care must be exercised, as the buds develop, to stop feeding in good time, so that the flowers will not be injured. In the first place, shade your house with a good shading of whitewash scattered over the glass, as a preventive against the flowers burning. We always get, in the early days of October, lovely, bright weather, with cool nights, running around the freezing point, and brilliant sunshine during the day. If the flowers are soft, this sunshine will melt them right down. Many times have I seen flowers utterly spoiled in a day in this manner, when they have been heavily fed. The crimson varieties, of course, burn much more readily than the others, yellow suffering the least, and the obvious lesson from this is, not to feed the red kinds too much.

Feeding should be stopped on any bud after it has the outer rows of petals well showing, if one wishes to be entirely safe.

Watch the Danger Signals.

There are certain danger signals that a plant throws out when feeding should stop, and a grower can be always governed by them. When the foliage gets so brittle that it snaps off the stem when touched, and when the leaf will break in pieces as it is crushed in the hand, you can conclude that those plants have got all the nitrogen that they need and possibly too much. The same conclusion can be drawn when one sees the buds with a slit underneath them, as though someone had cut the stem across with a knife. This indicates that the bud is getting more nourishment than it can assimilate, and nature steps in and shuts down on the supply by cutting off half the feeders. Some kinds are prone to do this much more than others—always, it will be observed, strong growers and rooters, such as Duckham and Clay Frick. When buds split badly they may be helped by making a perpendicular cut in the stem close under the bud. This will relieve the pressure and the flower will finish all right, if feeding be stopped and the house kept shaded.

The commercial grower who does not feed his plants has no trouble of this kind. Neither does he make the money that the man who takes chances does, as his flowers are not half the size, and therefore do not bring the best price.

Ventilation.

When the nights drop to freezing, the ventilators must be lowered, so that the temperature in the house will not run below 45 degrees. It is a mistake to close up the house entirely, as this causes the moisture to settle on the expanding flowers and another source of damping is explained.

All through October a crack of air can be left on the house, with a line of steam. This will give a dry, buoyant atmosphere, which is just what is needed. A temperature of 45 to 50 degrees is high enough. If it gets over that, more air can be given.

Crown buds need more heat to develop than do terminal ones. The latter will come all right in any temperature above actual frost, but the crown bud needs the heat to develop the petals from the hard lump in the center of the bud. It is astonishing, even to an old-timer, to see the lovely flower that develops from a weird-looking bud, which any man who did not know would be willing to wager could never possibly finish.

THAT HOUSE OF MUMS.

I received the REVIEW this morning and note the picture of my mum house, which has certainly come out fine. I wish you could see it, in reality, now. I never saw a finer lot of promising buds than I have at present. I had Mr. Jenkins over last week and he pronounced it the finest house of mums he ever saw, without exception. I have a little over 600 plants and every bud is coming perfect, so far as I can see at present. Of the newer varieties Mary Mason, O. H. Broomhead, Donnellan, J. C. Neill and Moir are doing exceptionally well, not forgetting Mrs. Norman Davis. Moir has rather long neck but most tremendous buds, if they will develop properly. I thank you for putting the picture in the REVIEW and I hope to be able to reciprocate some time.

THOMAS PROCTOR.

OUTDOOR STOCK IN WINTER.

What is the best way in which to keep mum stock outdoors in a coldframe over winter, for early spring cuttings, and how would it be best to strike the cuttings?

A. V. B.

The way that most growers carry over the stock plants is in a deep frame. The stock is set in the soil and, after the weather begins to get really cold, a light covering of leaves is scattered over the plants. This will do until zero weather begins to loom up, and then the frames should be covered with straw or other mats. Give air and light at any time that outside conditions will permit, and see that rats or mice do not get any footing in the frame, or your stock plants will be minus in the spring.

It should be remembered that it is the same with the mum as with many other plants—it is not the actual freezing that injures the plants so much as the alternate freezing and thawing that ensue when plants are not properly protected.

In the early spring get the leaves off in good season, and encourage the stock to move by letting the frame warm up on bright days. It will not be long before a crop of cuttings is available.

Striking the cuttings is simple enough if one has a propagating bench. Trim and put in the sand with carnation cuttings and treat the same way as carnations and the loss will be inconsiderable.

C. H. TOTTY.

SLOW DEVELOPMENT OF BUDS.

I send under separate cover a package of mum buds from plants with 36-inch stems. Many of the buds do not develop. The cuttings were taken early last spring from the bench, mostly from root growth. The soil was good. I did not feed much, only with some bone meal and hardwood ashes. I should like some light on this subject.

C. B.

The buds submitted to me were perfect in every respect and there is no reason why they should not develop. I think the only trouble is that C. B. is in too much of a hurry and does not know much about crown buds. The buds sent me were crowns and these buds take a long time to develop. I have often seen cases where terminal buds, taken four weeks later than the crown, were in flower ahead of it. The chief reason for this is that the crown bud has so many more petals to develop that it takes much longer to finish.

Of course one can get the bud too early on some kinds, as few varieties are like Monrovia or Golden Glow, which develop buds taken as early as July 12, but an August crown is all right on many of the midseason kind.

C. B. does not say what the variety is, though the bud looked like Bonnaffon. If it is, buds taken early in August will finish finely. If these buds are not showing any signs of opening by the middle of October, I should like to see more of them, accompanied by information as to the time when the buds were taken, and as to the variety and where it is growing.

C. H. TOTTY.

MUMS OUTDOOR.

I am in hopes you can tell me what is the matter with my chrysanthemums, grown outdoors in New Orleans, and what should be done to remedy the trouble.

I have a plot about sixteen feet wide and 203 feet long. This is divided into beds made crosswise, three feet wide and two feet apart. There are three rows of plants in each bed. The variety is called Eugene Bathenacy and was originated at Nolt's place here. They are grown one, two and three stems to a plant. About the beginning of March the bed, which is sandy, was well enriched with cow manure. The plants were set out about May 15. August 15 I gave each plant about a tablespoonful of pulverized bone meal. One sack of 100 pounds was used for this, covering the whole patch. About three weeks later I dusted over the beds, around the roots, one bag of 100 pounds of cottonseed meal in its dry state. The plants are vigorous and about three and one-half to four feet high. A great many of the buds are damping off, and some are at a standstill, not developing. Could the trouble be remedied? Some of the plants make no buds. Do you think the variety is too weak to take up the above quantity of fertilizers? A. M. A.

I have never grown stock outside in the locality the correspondent hails from, but I cannot see that the quantity of fertilizer he speaks of using could do any harm to the plants. Possibly some local florist could diagnose the case better than I, but I would think that the buds were damping from either night dews or heavy rainfall. This could be helped by protecting the buds with sash laid on a framework, or using a canvas that could be fixed to roll up and down. Some of the plants making no buds may be explained by the points being eaten out by insects. This is by no means uncommon in greenhouse culture, and I would think this grower would find that the explanation, as no variety that I am acquainted with runs to blind growth naturally. I have known buds to rot when the roots were not kept sufficiently moist in hot weather, but I assume that the plants in this case have not suffered in that respect. C. H. T.

CHRYSANthemum SOCIETY.

Committees to Judge Seedlings.

President Loveless has announced the committees to examine seedlings and sports on dates as follows: October 5, 12, 19 and 26, November 2, 9, 16, 23 and 30. Exhibits, to receive attention from the committees, must in all cases be prepaid to destination, and the entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week preceding the examination, or may accompany the blooms. Special attention is called to the rule requiring that sports, to receive a certificate, must pass three committees.

New York—J. G. Dailedouze, chairman; William Duckham and A. Herrington. Ship flowers to New York Cut Flower Co., 55 West Twenty-sixth street, care of chairman; all flowers to be on hand by 2 p. m. on day of examination.

Chicago—J. B. Deamud, chairman; George Asmus and Andrew McAdams. Flowers should be sent care of J. B. Deamud, 51 Wabash avenue, and should arrive before 2 p. m. on day of examination.

Philadelphia—A. B. Cartledge, chairman; John Westcott and W. K. Harris. Ship flowers to chairman, 1514 Chestnut street.

Cincinnati—R. Witterstaetter, chairman; James Allan and Henry Schwartz. Ship flowers to Jabez Elliott Flower Market, care of janitor.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Early Firing.

Through this section of the country the warm weather which accompanied the late drought has made firing unnecessary, but now that the drought has been broken the temperature has undergone a great change. The nights are damp and chilly and a line or two of pipes in each house will be necessary to keep the temperature at the best growing point.

There is, perhaps, no time of the whole season when the night firing requires more skillful handling than it does during this month. Especially is this true if you do not employ a regular night man, which is the case on a great many small places. It is almost impossible to tell with any certainty before midnight how the thermometer will stand by morning, and the grower who does not employ a night man is apt to find his houses either up to 70 degrees, with the ventilators closed tight and heat around, or down below 40 degrees, with six inches of air on and no fire. Either of these is a bad condition for the plants to be in and if repeated frequently will have a serious effect on the winter's crop.

We figure that where a place can possibly be made to afford a night man, such a man should be employed, and I might also add that a good, competent, conscientious night man is about as valuable as any man you can have on the place. If you can find a man who has some knowledge of growing you are fortunate. This knowledge will stand him in good stead during this variable weather. Any man with average intelligence and a willingness to have coal can soon be taught to run the plant during steady cold weather, but you couldn't possibly give him sufficient instructions to handle the system to the best advantage during this month. For instance: To keep up steam all night and to raise the ventilators away up to keep the temperature down is a waste of fuel, yet we have often found just that condition.

We make it a rule, when the temperature in the house drops below 50 degrees with two inches of air on, to run the steam around in one pipe in each house to keep the air moving and keep the ventilators high enough to keep the temperature where it belongs. Before we turn on another pipe we close the ventilators and then, if one pipe will not hold it high enough, we turn on a second pipe, or more, as required.

You will sometimes find during damp, rainy spells that the temperature will be high enough, but a pipe will be necessary to keep the atmosphere dry, and the ventilators will have to be raised perhaps several inches. So you will use the steam pipe to control the moisture in the atmosphere as well as the temperature.

You will find it beneficial to the plants to have some ventilation on the houses all the time, except when one pipe will not keep the temperature up to the mark. Do not make the mistake of trying to shut a lot of warmth in the house in the evening to keep it warm through the night. It will do more harm than good, because, in the first place, it will not last until morning, and to run the plants too warm a few hours, only to chill them off later on, is about as wise as for a man to step from a Turkish bath into a refrigerator. When there is no steam up there should always be ventilation on the houses.

We find among growers who do not grow roses a tendency to put off firing as long as it can possibly be done. Frequently the temperature is allowed to drop below 40 degrees before firing is commenced. While the carnation is more tolerant of cold than it is of excessive heat, yet this is a mistake too often made. Growers who handle roses, of course, have no excuse for not having heat in the carnation houses whenever necessary.

Watering.

With the cooler weather and the firing at night, the watering will come in for extra attention. The place as a whole will require far less water than it did two weeks ago, and yet in spots which are near heating pipes the soil will dry out rapidly and will need to be watched closely. If you put on a mulch last month you will not be able to tell much about the condition of the soil by the looks of the mulch. It will be necessary to dig into the soil here and there to examine it. There will be more danger of overwatering from now on than from underwatering. As a rule the carnation, after it is thoroughly established, likes a liberal supply of water, but it must not be overdone.

Watering should also be confined to the roots, except what is required by way of syringing. Keep a sharp lookout for red spider near the steam pipes. The old adage, "A stitch in time saves nine," is well applied here, except that the killing of one spider might save you the killing of nine million later on, when conditions are less favorable to the killing.

When you begin firing drop a pinch of sulphur on the hot pipe here and there. This will purify the atmosphere and stop a dose of leaf spot which may be developing without your having noticed it. Especially is this true in case of a rainy spell. Repeat it about once each week under normal conditions and oftener if deemed necessary. Do not overdo it, however, as the fumes if too strong will take the brightness from most of the livelier colored blooms. A. F. J. BAUR.

CARNATION SOCIETY'S LIST.

In looking over the list of carnation names published in the REVIEW for September 24, at the instance of the American Carnation Society, I was struck by its woeful lack of completeness. If this society has nothing better than that list to guide it in avoiding duplication of names, it might as well have nothing. There are scores of varieties, many of which were widely disseminated, which are not named in the list.

It is unfortunate that the list was not accompanied by some explanation by the secretary as to its purport, and if any names were purposely left out, the why of it. Under the circumstances one can only assume that it is supposed to be a complete list of all varieties introduced to the trade in this country to date. As such it is surely a failure, to say the least.

This society should own a list of varieties as complete as it is possible to make it. Furthermore, it should not only have the names of the varieties, but a full, but brief, description, as well as the name of the raiser and the disseminator (if they are not the same), the pedigree and the year of introduction. In fact, it should be a complete authority on carnation nomenclature as far as this country is concerned. Such a list would be of inestimable value to the society in years to come and the sooner it is compiled the less labor will be required to get it up; it will be a herculean task even now.

Mr. Herr has labored many years for our society with very meager compensation, and inasmuch as he is to lay down the burden of his office at the end of this year it would perhaps be asking him too much to undertake this work, which he could hardly finish before his time is up. It would be well, however, for anyone who may aspire to that office to consider well the work connected therewith. This thing must come sooner or later. It will entail much labor and time and some expense, but it will be worth the price.

A. F. J. BAUR.

OSMUNDA FIBER.

In the orchid notes in the REVIEW of October 1, W. N. Craig mentions that there is nothing better than Osmunda fiber to pot Cattleya gigas in. My experience coincides with his exactly, and I found during my trip to Europe this year that the much heralded Belgian leaf-mold has been discarded by the best growers in England, and they are actually importing, at great cost, the Osmunda root from this country to use in their cattleya growing. The home-grown peat is finer in texture and the plants do not root in it as they do in the Osmunda fiber. This has been one reason why the English grower has argued in favor of leaf-mold, not being informed in regard to the different kinds of peat as we understand the term here.

If anyone who has a stock of the Osmunda fiber on his place, and cares to sell it at a fair price, will advertise his stock in the REVIEW, it will introduce him to parties with whom he can build up a profitable business, if he will live up to Teddy's motto of "A square deal."

C. H. TOTTY.

WHITE FLY.

Our pelargoniums are infested with a little white fly or miller, about the size of a half-grown green aphid, and with what appears to be the larvæ of this fly—little, white, egg-like bodies, sticking to the under side of the leaf. We have not seen the eggs or larvæ on anything but pelargoniums, but the flies frequently light on chrysanthemum and other leaves. Can you tell us what they are and how to kill them? This insect is entirely new to us and we find nothing like it mentioned in Scott's Manual.

D. F. C.

The pest which is troubling you is the white fly, Aleyrodes vaporariorum, which does an immense amount of damage annually, especially under glass. The little adult fly has a yellowish body and is quite lively when disturbed. The eggs are laid on the under side of the foliage and the tiny young insects suck the juices from the leaves, causing them to gradually become brown when badly attacked. These pests breed rapidly. About six weeks elapse from the laying of the eggs until the insects are full-grown. Many generations will be produced during the growing of any single crop.

While spraying with cold water, warm water, soap and water and sundry other mixtures acts as a partial remedy, there is no form of fumigation which will effectually clean out this destructive little pest but hydrocyanic acid gas. Great care is necessary in using this fumigant, but it is now in quite general use; in fact, on many places all others have been abandoned. To secure the cubic area of your house, multiply the length by the breadth and this again by the average height. Use stone jars for fumigating. The acid will speedily eat away any metal ones.

Procure some cyanide of potassium of ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent strength. Insist on this brand, for the general run of drug stores carry a grade of fifty per cent strength. This will cost about 50 cents a pound in sealed cans. Ordinary commercial sulphuric acid is all right. It will cost 9 to 10 cents per pound. To kill white fly, we have found that in a tight house one-half ounce of cyanide per 1,000 cubic feet, added to double that weight of sulphuric acid and left in all night, sufficed. To each 1,000 cubic feet weigh out one ounce water; add to this slowly an equal weight of sulphuric acid. Pour the latter in slowly, so that it will not heat much. Wrap the preparation of cyanide in paper. Drop this into the liquid and then leave the house quickly. Lock the door and allow no one to enter before morning.

Remember that breathing the fumes from this gas means a rather speedy death to humans as well as insects, so on no account stay around to note the effects of it, as you might were nicotine being used. Of course, all ventilators should be closed tightly and any crevices stopped. The floors should be dry and evening should be chosen for the fumigation. Cool nights are also preferable to warm ones. One fumigation will destroy the fly, but the eggs will not be harmed. To insure the complete killing out of the pest, therefore, give three successive doses at intervals of a week.

Gas is really a cheap fumigant and, once you have tried it and have mastered the little details pertaining to it, you will be able to use it on practically every kind of plant. Allowance, of course, must always be made for the tightness of the houses. In loose structures double the dose named may be necessary. A little careful experimenting will soon satisfy you on this point.

C. W.

FUCHSIAS.

When is the proper time to rest fuchsias, and at what time should they be started? Should they be pruned back before starting? Give me some knowledge of handling them after starting.

E. G.

Gradually reduce the water supply after the middle of October. The plants will soon commence to drop their foliage. Do not discontinue the supply entirely, or the wood will shrivel instead of taking on a firm, nutty-brown hue. The plants will winter in any dry atmosphere just clear of freezing. Do not allow them to become absolutely dust-dry at the root or they will die. Treatment similar to that given hydrangeas will suit them.

In starting the plants, avoid heavy waterings until they are breaking freely. Place them in a warm, moist house, and spray two or three times a day. Remove to cooler quarters when they have broken freely. The plants should be headed back before you start them, although some prefer to wait until they break. A temperature of 48 to 50 degrees at night will be ample, once they are started. Shake out and repot them as soon as they break. For compost, use fibrous loam, old hotbed or cow manure and sand; some well-rotted leaf-mold may also be added. Keep the plants carefully pinched and all flowers removed until three weeks before you want them in bloom.

Cuttings taken in March will make excellent plants in 6-inch or 7-inch pots for September or October blooming.

C. W.

KEROSENE EMULSION.

Will you kindly tell me through the columns of your paper how to make kerosene emulsion that will not injure palms and ferns? I used the following formula, found in Taft's "Greenhouse Management": Two ounces soap, one gallon water, one pint kerosene and dilute sixteen times. I put this in tub and dipped palms in it to get rid of scale. I guess they got. The palms did. L. C. B.

Kerosene emulsion is not a safe remedy to apply to palms and ferns, from the fact that unless the emulsion is perfectly compounded there will be found some free kerosene, and this oil is bound to injure the foliage to which it is applied. I would not advise anyone to use this preparation on tender plants, but prefer a solution of whale-oil soap, or ivory soap, or one of the various tobacco soaps for this purpose. Lemon oil solution is also much used for scale upon palms, and when applied carefully gives good results. W. H. T.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Mention Your Express Company.

The writer believes that the REVIEW would confer a favor on buyers by advising them to be sure to mention, in all orders for shipments of stock, what express company they wish to handle the goods. In our town we have six different express companies, and when we call up any of them to find out what company runs through some customer's town they are not overparticular about telling us, if it does not happen to be their company, but they are likely to say, "We can handle it all right for you." The result may be that the package will go over two lines, thus increasing the cost to the buyer. About one buyer out of six mentions the express company when ordering. F. R. THORNTON.

THE BEST SWEET PEAS.

The National Sweet Pea Society of England recommends the following as the best varieties in the various shades of color:

White, Dorothy Eckford, Etta Dyke and Nora Unwin; crimson and scarlet, Queen Alexandra and King Edward VII; rose and carmine, John Ingman; yellow and buff, James Grieve and Paradise Ivory; blue, Lord Nelson and A. J.

Cook; blush, Mrs. Hardcastle Sykes; cerise, Chrissie Unwin; pink, Countess Speneer and Constance Oliver; orange shades, Helen Lewis and St. George; lavender, Lady Grisel Hamilton and Frank Dolby; violet and purple, Rosie Adams; magenta, Menie Christie; picotee-edged, Evelyn Hemus; fancy, Sybil Eckford; mauve, Mrs. Walter Wright and The Marquis; maroon and bronze, Black Knight and Hannah Dale; striped and flaked, red and rose, Jessie Cuthbertson, Paradise and Red Flake; bicolor, Jeannie Gordon; marbled, Helen Pierce.

LOST CHECK.

Please inform us as to responsibility for checks lost in the mail; that is, in the ordinary course of business a florist receives a check on a bank in a city dising bank. If the collecting bank owns the check, having recourse to the depositor only as an indorser in case of non-payment, then a loss in the mails is a loss of property belonging to the bank. If the bank takes the paper merely as an agent for its collection, the duty of the bank, like that of other agents, is to use due care and diligence in making the collection. If the check is lost in spite of such care, the bank is not liable; if it is lost through lack of such care, the bank is liable. To send a check through the mails is not negligence, in itself, and the bank cannot be held if all the precautions were taken for safe delivery or return that a prudent business man takes when he is dealing with his own business.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Trade Conditions.

Carnations and roses are the staple flowers in the market here at present, but with a few days of cool weather the vanguard of the mums will make its appearance and from now until after Thanksgiving the queen of autumn will hold full sway. Funeral work has kept the dealers busy, but social functions will soon make demands that will add materially to the work.

Club Meeting.

At the first meeting of the Rhode Island Florists' and Gardeners' Club for the winter season there was a large attendance and much enthusiasm. There was a general discussion of the trade conditions and the outlook for various crops, while descriptions of the vacation trips of the members occupied much time and furnished much entertainment. It was voted to inaugurate a series of essays during the winter, similar to that of last year, which will furnish trade subjects for discussion. Eugene McCarron and Bernard F. Quinn were elected to membership.

Various Notes.

William C. Young has opened a retail flower store at 316 Broad street.

William B. Hazard, 112 Westminster street, has been making a novel and attractive advertising display of dahlias at his store, by which he has stimulated a considerable demand for these blooms. One long counter was covered with white cotton batting, on which were the numerous varieties of cut blooms of all classes, and from these the sales were made. Thousands of blooms were thus disposed of every day.

Herbert Allen Leach, junior member of the firm of Michael J. Leach & Son, of Pawtucket, and Mary Elvira MacAllen were married September 24 at the home of E. W. Orswell, Pawtucket, Rev. Frank Appleton officiating. While both the contracting parties are well known, the ceremony was a quiet one, only the immediate members of the families being present. Mr. and Mrs. Leach left for New York city, where they will remain for several weeks.

At the seventy-seventh annual fair of the American Institute, recently held at New York, George L. Stillman, a Western dahlia grower, received six special and two second premiums on his exhibition of dahlias. At the Vermont State Fair, held at White River Junction a few days ago, Mr. Stillman took two first prizes on his exhibit of dahlias.

CHARLES A. RIEMAN, Connorsville, Ind., offers special inducements to purchasers, as follows: "With every plant we give the earth, with every bloom a scent."

BANK clearings for the whole country, generally considered the best indication of business activity, were for September five per cent ahead of a year ago, the first increase that has been reported since the upheaval of last October.

LYMAN B. CRAW, of the Lord & Burnham Co., says the trade is growing at such a rate that in his opinion estimates of the present extent of the field are apt to be wide of the mark; no one knows how big a body of men are practicing
"the art that doth mend nature."

PUBLICATIONS representing some of the leading industries indicate that orders are, in many cases, being held back until after the presidential election and that October will see a pronounced lull in general business revival. One thing in favor of the florists is that one needs flowers when he needs them; if to be bought at all, their purchase will not brook delay.

THE European method of propagating bedding calceolarias is now practiced to some extent in this country, and with considerable success. The old-world method consists of making cuttings from the plants in the fall and dibbling them into frames outdoors, sand only being used for the cuttings to root in. All that is required is that as much light as possible be given all through the winter and that the cuttings be kept from freezing.

ing last week's REVIEW weighed 4,950

VINCA is often recommended as a ground cover where trees, evergreen or deciduous, are planted. It answers the purpose quite well and effectually, but it is possible that sometimes it does its work so well that it is the means of the undoing of the more valuable things under which it grows, and that because it covers the ground so completely as to exclude the air necessary for the well-being of the trees, besides impoverishing the soil to such an extent that the trees are robbed of their legitimate source of sustenance. English ivy covers more ground, with more regard to restricted area for the ramification of roots, than does the vinca, with capabilities for offect fully equal to the latter.

NORTHERN INDIANA FLORISTS.

A number of florists of the northern part of Indiana met at North Manchester October 1 and organized the Northern Indiana Florists' Association. Willard W. Dederick, of Warsaw, Ind., was elected president, and William E. Hand, of the Argos Floral & Plant Co., Argos, Ind., secretary and treasurer.

The membership fee will be 50 cents for the first twenty-five members.

As all present expressed their intention of attending the flower show in Chicago, it was decided that the next meeting would be on Thursday at noon, during the show.

All members, and all other florists of northern Indiana wishing to become members and cooperate with and meet with us on that date, are requested to notify the secretary.

OBITUARY.

Alvah A. Eaton.

Alvah A. Eaton, a well-known botanist, who died at his home in North Easton, Mass., was born in Seabrook, N. H., November 20, 1865. He passed his youth there, and also taught school five years.
His health then failing, he went to California for several years, and after his return he devoted himself assiduously to botanical pursuits, making original discoveries and becoming a special authority in ferns and grasses. He wrote much for botanical magazines and published several pamphlets.

About six years ago, Oakes Ames, of North Easton, engaged Mr. Eaton's services, and until his death the botanist was employed in Mr. Ames' botanical laboratory, his work there being chiefly upon orchids. Mr. Ames sent him to Florida several times, where he secured an abundance of valuable specimens.

The Great Central Market.

Last week the market passed through one of those spasms which periodically bring joy to the growers while showering upon the devoted heads of the wholesalers the protests of buyers who cannot understand why there should be such radical changes in prices and no change whatever in values. When a buyer is ordering each day and finds the prices doubled between shipments, and then over night doubled again, he is hardly to be blamed for failure to understand the situation, but at the same time the wholesaler is powerless. All last week there was a stiffening market, and when it came to Friday and Saturday, the way carnation prices jumped kept both buyers and sellers guessing. It really was to have been expected, but it nevertheless took a good many people by surprise. Every year, when the outdoor stuff passes off the stage, there is a flurry in the carnation market and prices take a jump with about every sale. The wholesalers are helpless in the matter. They much prefer to maintain a steady price, neither too high nor too low, as affording their best opportunity for doing business and making a profit, but when there comes a sudden call for stock far in excess of the supply, values will soar through the working of the natural law of supply and demand.

Roses last week did not advance to the extent that carnations went up, but there was, nevertheless, a pronounced improvement in prices. There now are some first-class roses, but it still is the fact that carnations are poor and prices not in accordance with values. Of course, there are some really first-class carnations, but the larger part of the receipts cannot be so classed; the greater part of the stock is still too short in stem. Killarney and Richmond are the leading roses and both are fine. Beauty is in rather better supply than a week ago. Other varieties are showing the benefit of cooler weather.

There has been a fine sale for chrysanthemums, of which three colors now are available. The supply did not increase as rapidly as had been looked for and prices have been well maintained. It is stated that some of the growers again failed utterly with their early mums, and anyone in the market can see that a good deal of stock is poor, but those who have had fair quality on their early varieties have done splendidly with them. It was figured every day that the morrow would bring a large increase in the supply, and by the middle of this week this expectation had been realized; prices weakened.

There are good supplies of valley, and Easter lilies are to be had, but are selling well. Violets are much improved, but not yet in specially good demand. Cattleyas are more abundant, of good quality, and sell well, but at lower prices. Outdoor flowers are practically gone. A few asters still are seen, but are not of usable quality.

There has been a good call for strings of asparagus and smilax for store openings.

The current week opened with a large business, but prices just a shade easier than on Friday and Saturday. The prospect was for an easier market, although the strength imparted by the changed conditions last week may hold over through the current week.

Club Meeting.

The attendance at the club meetings has steadily increased since the removal to the rooms at the Union restaurant, the social feature being an attraction. The number present October 1 was the largest yet and a notable number of applications for membership were received. These included: Joseph Kohout, Hinsdale; Charles Arnold, Des Plaines; Wm. Miellander, Morton Grove; Joseph Biever, W. W. Abrahamson, Henry L. Seitz, Wm. Arnold, P. L. McKee, Peter Schonsbor, George Collins and Frank Kadlec. Albert T. Hey, Western Springs, and J. F. Dumeke, Batavia, were elected to membership. C. W. Scott tendered his resignation, as he is now located in New York.

The balance in the San Francisco fund was ordered returned pro rata to the subscribers, except where they have definitely stated that their portion is to be turned over to the club's general fund.

It was voted to have a ladies' night at an early date.

Flower show arrangements were discussed.

The September Weather.

The meteorological summary for September shows the month was the warmest September since the weather bureau started keeping records, thirty-eight years ago. The mean temperature was 71 degrees, while normal is 65 degrees. Also, the rainfall was 2.08 inches, while 3.06 would be normal. There was the unusual number of twenty-one clear days, only three cloudy and six partly cloudy. There was a frost September 29, but not killing.

Various Notes.

Leonard Kill says he knew, all along, how it would come out, and that there isn't the slightest doubt who will win in the world's series. Peter Reinberg's is Cub headquarters, you know.

There will be a meeting of the flower show reception committee at the Union at 8 p. m., Friday evening, October 9.

As showing the state of general business in Chicago, it is interesting to note that the bank clearings for September were only 2.2 per cent less than in the same month of 1907, which was before the excitement and when business was on the boom. It is the smallest decrease shown in 1908, the largest having been in May, 13.9 per cent.

F. N. Kenyon, who, as the Zenith Rustic Mfg. Co., supplies local wholesalers with birchbark ware, has gotten out a birchbark canoe in several small sizes for air plants, that makes a first-class seller.

The Benthay-Coatsworth Co. says that the rose plants at the Coatsworth greenhouses, New Castle, that were thought to have been injured in the recent fire, are breaking well from the base and that they have come out practically without loss, except the large amount of work entailed.

Alex. Newett and family left October 3 to make their home at St. Joseph, Mo.

John Sinner says that Sinner Bros. never had so good prospects as at the present time.

It is worth while noting that Emil Buettner has no red carnation on his place, having found that varieties of other colors pay him better. Neither has he any early mums this year, as late varieties have made the most profit. He says, however, that the late varieties and midseason sorts appear to be all coming in together this year. He is cutting a fine crop of Killarney.

Police Captain Schuettler is interested in a range of houses at Wilmette, that are turning out some first-class carnations.

H. Bauske and Mrs. Bauske have recently returned from a visit at Detroit and a trip to Niagara Falls.

At J. A. Budlong's they were especially fortunate last week in having the best carnation crop of the season to date.

Perey Jones has built a neat private office at the Flower Growers' market and has installed a stenographer, for the purpose of reaching out for the buyers who do not come to him.

John Kruchten is beginning a fortnight's term of jury duty in the criminal court.

George Reinberg is cutting a large crop of Kate Moulton rose. The only fault of this variety appears to be its weak neck.

E. C. Amling says that Fred Weber's crop of Beauties in the last fortnight has been the best that proficient grower ever has cut and that a tidy sum of money has been taken in on them.

This is the week of the fall openings on State street. The George Wittbold Co. has had its hands full, having supplied practically all the plants and cut flowers. L. Baumann & Co. have supplied the artificial autumn foliage.

W. E. Lynch, at E. H. Hunt's, has added to the equipment what he calls a violet sink. It is a zinc-lined box about 4x10 feet and only a few inches deep. A wire net supports the bunches of violets, leaving only the stems to hang in the water, which constantly flows through the sink.

At Muir's two stores, on the south side, business is reported picking up since the cooler weather brought people home from the country.

Bassett & Washburn report that Monday, October 5, was the busiest day they have had since spring.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. has begun to cut antirrhinum and also rubrum lilies. Arrangements have been made for an orchid supply.

Peter Reinberg was chairman of the corner-stone laying ceremony at the new Lyman Trumbull school, October 3, and furnished flowers for the occasion.

H. R. Hughes says that the laying off of men in the big west side factories did not noticeably affect his business, but that when the street was torn up for the relaying of the car tracks there was a marked falling off in his trade. September with him was considerably better than a year ago.

The Foley Mfg. Co. supplied the material for the large range of new houses for Concordia cemetery.

Wieter Bros. say they are well pleased with the way the season is opening for them.

Emil Kroll is sending Zech & Mann some good stock.

Vaughan & Sperry report violets as much improved in quality.

C. W. McKellar says Cattleya labiata is now in full crop and demand excellent.

Scheiden & Schoos are cutting some fine blooms of their red seedling carnation to be disseminated this season.

The E. F. Winterson Co. has gone into the plant business again. They handle a lot of Bostons, etc., every fall.

Weiland & Risch have their store in fine shape.

The John C. Moninger Co. reports that its season has been fully as good as a year ago. The Poehlmann Bros. Co. is using the new ventilator, hinged to the bars without header, in its newest range, now going up.

The Merry Window Hanger, originated by Anna Grace Sawyer, of the Pansy Garden Flower Shop, 2020 West Madison street, is one of the popular window attractions this fall. These raffia hangers are adjustable, used to hang roses, potted plants or fish bowls of any size or shape. Schiller, Wittbold and Mangel are handling them.

The Market.

Business in the cut flower market showed marked improvement last week. There was no great rush, but considerable work was turned out for openings and for funerals. Some of the leading retailers say that quite a few good orders have been placed ahead and that the outlook for this month is encouraging.

The wholesalers say stock has shortened up and that prices will go up this week. There are still plenty of good roses to be had, especially in white and pink. Beauties are coming in finely and have the call over other roses. Carnations are scarce. Enchantress and Boston Market are among the best. Prices on these have stiffened up to 3 and 4 cents for the best. Chrysanthemums are slow in coming in, but more are looked for this week. Cosmos is selling at $1 per hundred. Good valley can be had at any time. Smilax is having a good call, and so are other greens.

Various Notes.

Rudolph Klag, late manager for John Eggleston, Lexington, Mo., was a visitor.

Charles A. Kuehn visited the Illinois State Fair at Springfield last week.

The Michel Plant & Bulb Co. states that it will hold an auction sale of plants the second week of each month, the last sale being successful.

The decorations by C. Young & Sons Co. at the Merchants' Exchange for the Veiled Prophets' ball excelled everything ever attempted for this occasion. William H. Taft, republican candidate for president, was present.

The Riessen Floral Co. did a rushing business Sunday, October 4, German day. They had a great many orders ahead for

Charles Juengel furnished the plant decorations for the opening of the new Maryland hotel, Saturday, October 3. Ostertag Bros., the Foster Floral Co. and Alex. Siegel did most of the cut flower work presented by friends of the proprietor of the hotel.

Walter Weber, of the H. J. Weber & Sons Co., is cutting a nice lot of roses of good quality. The varieties are Bride, Maid, Killarney and Richmond. This stock is handled by the W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co.

Mrs. Rebecca Edom Wilson, who recently took her own life, at Pittsfield, Ill., was well known among the trade here as housekeeper for the late Henry Shaw. At Mr. Shaw's death she was well remembered in his will, being given life interests in some downtown property which now will revert to the Missouri Botanic Garden and St. Luke's hospital.

Max Herzog, who for the last two years has been in charge of the greenhouses at the Female Hospital, has them in fine shape for the winter season.

Robert Beyer, William C. Young and Charles Juengel have been appointed judges of election in their respective wards for the presidential election.

William C. Smith will, at the Florists' Club's meeting this week, read a paper entitled "In What Way Socially Can the Members of the Club Be Brought Closer Together?"

DETROIT.

The Market.

Just before the recent spell of cool, dark weather struck Detroit, stock was quite plentiful, but not so now; all kinds of flowers are scarce. The frost last week finished what asters were left. Then, with the advent of more seasonable weather, came an increased demand. Add to this a shortening up of the supply of indoor stock, and you have the answer.

Few mums have been seen so far, but a few more days of sunshine will bring them out in large quantities. Carnations are improving slowly; the stems are getting longer, but they seem weaker, for the size of the flowers has also increased somewhat.

Probably the first southern smilax handled here this season was used by Breitmeyer's at a wedding decoration Monday, October 5.

Various Notes.

Asman & Dunn are at present cutting some fine Harrisii lilies.

A Bright-Mayor club has been organized here, the purpose of which is to further the interests of Philip Breitmeyer for mayor. Most of the florists have already enrolled.

Schroeter's staff has been on the jump since fall openings began at the stores. Besides the decorations for Newcomb's large store, for which over 1,500 Beauties were used this year, in connection with other stuff, several other stores were decorated.

Robert Rahaley visited the greenhouses of the growers in Greenfield last week. Tom Browne expects to have a fine crop of mums and carnations ready soon. Albert Stahelin's mums look unusually promising. Frank Holznagle's place was also visited by Mr. Rahaley. This is one of the model plants in this vicinity. As a carnation, rose and chrysanthemum grower Mr. Holznagle is hard to beat.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange has had to put on extra help to repack the thousands of ferns being put in cold storage.

The Kenneth Anderson Co. reports an exceedingly fine summer trade. While there has not been so much local building, they have increased their business throughout the state.

While in Chicago recently the writer had the pleasure of being shown through Wienhoeber's store and greenhouses on Elm street. This is one of the neatest places I ever have seen. The most interesting part of the place was upstairs over the store. This part of the building was formerly used by Richard Mansfield as his living rooms while in Chicago. Wienhoeber's now have it fitted out as display rooms for all kinds of baskets, vases, etc., of which they carry a big line. H. S.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Refreshing rains, but not enough; a cold snap, but no frost, and here we are again with delightful Indian summer weather. The outdoor flowers are practically over. Hydrangeas, asters, gladioli and dahlias have passed, and, except goldenrod and autumn leaves, there are no real competitors against the roses, carnations and chrysanthemums. Before the end of the week the chrysanthemum again will be king. Orchids are in a class by themselves, with gardenias.

Roses start the week slowly and prices wobble. Beauties, with the rest of them, have found a lower level. There is an abundance of all varieties, and the common and mildewed stock is almost worthless.

Carnations are doing better and growing more perfect every day. All the growers are shipping heavily, and the quality is fully up to that of any season at this date.

Violets are going begging at $2.50 per thousand for the best. It will be a hard task to boost them to their throne again.

Various Notes.

Next Monday the Florists' Club will hold its October meeting. The canna expert, Antoine Wintzer, who will lecture, deserves a big audience. Will Rickards will not disappoint the inner man, and there will undoubtedly be some interesting exhibits.

Some fine palm stock from the Biltmore Nursery, Asheville, was disposed of at auction last week by Elliott. Among the heavy buyers were Stumpp, Meyer, Troy, Trepel and Hanig. Many of the kentias were fifteen to twenty feet high and brought as high as $30 each. New York decorators are certainly well prepared for big weddings in high places.

Cleary's Horticultural Co. is now receiving its importations purchased by Ambrose Cleary while in Europe this summer. These, and great quantities of evergreens, bulbs, nursery stock and ferns, are now on exhibition and auction. Sales continue every Tuesday and Friday, probably until December.

E. V. Hallock, of Floral Park, has returned from his summer outing at Margarettsville, in the Catskills.

At Floral Park, Charles E. Allen has replaced three small houses with a modern structure, 35x100. His entire plant is devoted to carnations, which are handled by his brother, W. S. Allen, on West Twenty-eighth street. The varieties grown are Victory, Enchantress, Queen, Patten and Lawson. The veteran father of the Allen boys, now in his eighty-first year, is hale and hearty.

To I. Hendrickson, of the J. L. Childs force of managers, I am indebted for an opportunity to inspect field after field of gladioli, totaling millions of bulbs now being dug, sorted, shipped or stored. Of the hundreds of varieties featured at the fairs everywhere, America still holds the center of the stage. Cannas, tuberous begonias and novelties innumerable are here in endless quantity. The outlook, Mr. Hendrickson says, was never better and the season's business compares favorably with any year in the firm's history. Some idea of the rise in value of land here may be gathered from the fact that a plot of twenty-five acres, which cost Mr. Childs less than $10,000 three years ago, he lately refused to sell under $60,000.

C. W. Ward last week returned from Michigan to the Cottage Gardens. The new office building is complete in every detail, and the splendidly laid-out approach to it, with its charming evergreen hedges and specimens, is worth going far to see. The greenhouses were not added to this year, simply because quantum sufficit, or, in other words, enough is as good as a feast. The favorites are Alma Ward, Mrs. Ward, Beacon and Enchantress. Many seedlings are under surveillance. John Young has handled this stock for years. The nursery has grown until there are few in the country that excel it. Enormous quantities of peonies and rhododendrons are cultivated, and the stock of silver spruce in all sizes is a revelation. Mr. Ward's lieutenants have demonstrated great managerial ability, and that genial gentleman can give his time to his sawmills and forest preserves with perfect safety.

Anton Schultheis, of College Point, is sending out his new catalogue. The new greenhouses are rapidly approaching completion.

The Growers' Cut Flower Co. has rented the store at 39 West Twenty-eighth street, and opened for business on Wednesday, October 7. The officers are as follows: President, J. Von der Linden; vice-president, Henry Weston; secretary, G. Lang; treasurer, F. Kramer; manager, J. J. Coan. Mr. Coan has had twenty-four years' experience in every department of the florists' business and is well qualified for the position which was awarded him from among twenty-two applicants. Mr. Coan has during the last two years been manager for J. King Duer, on Madison avenue.

Samuel Woodrow's palm store on West Thirtieth street is filled, and this week the big importation of boxwood arrives, so a plot on upper Broadway has been secured for safe storage.

Boston has invaded New York, and Arthur Newman will open a retail store Saturday, October 10, at the corner of Fifth avenue and Madison square, a spot almost as historic as Bunker Hill.

Harry Bunyard is on the high seas, on his way back from Merrie England. He will find a wonderful transformation at Fibrotta Ware is made of Indurated Fiber—wood pulp, chemically hardened and compressed. It is far superior to either wood or earthen ware, as it is moulded in one piece—no hoops necessary—cannot warp and is practically unbreakable.

In plant tubs, rolling stands, saucers and vases, Fibrotta is the ware you should carry, both for your own use and for your customers. You'll find Fibrotta a real business builder in this department, as it's infinitely more cleanly, durable and economical than any other ware you can handle. It comes in either mahogany finish or green enamel.

Boddington's, with a store more than doubled in size, and you can see the other street from the front door nearly a block through. This is progress with a large P and also two large Bs.

Nicholas Schreiner, with many years' experience as salesman in the wholesale business with the veteran, J. K. Allen, and others, has launched his bark on the wholesale sea and will locate at 41 West Twenty-eighth street, above Millang Bros., and in the store formerly occupied by Thomas Young, Jr. If Nicholas succeeds in business as creditably as he did in bowling, all will be well.

The brother of John A. Foley, manager for Leeakes & Co., has fully recovered from his severe illness and has plenty to keep his new $500 express wagon busy among the florists of West Twenty-eighth street.

H. E. Froment has beautified his store front in the latest popular color, and is now ready, inside and out, for the record season he cheerfully anticipates.

Mr. Ujfalussy has retired from the firm of Weigel & Ujfalussy, Mr. Weigel continuing the business, a practical man and with a trade that has been established since 1866. He finds its growth necessitates the services of two principals and will shortly add a partner to his enterprise.

Niessen's

News Column

In addition to our complete stock of cut flowers and greens, we handle florists' supplies. We can furnish you all the staple articles, and they cost you no more than you pay anywhere else. When ordering cut flowers we can ship your supplies at the same time, and very often save you an extra express charge. It is quite a convenience.

Easter Lilies Every Day in the Year

That is what we claim to have. There may be an exceptional day, when the supply is somewhat short, but we have them so regularly that we can safely make the above statement. On a few days' notice can furnish them by the 1000, if necessary. Please bear in mind, that when you want lilies to order them from Niessen.

Chrysanthemums

will have the call this month. We expect a good supply of the early varieties. There will be the usual brisk demand for the early ones, and it is advisable to order in advance, when possible.

We have had single violets for some time, but on account of the warm weather could not recommend them. We can now safely ship them a reasonable distance. Our single violets are picked in the morning, not the day before. On special orders, for shipment on night trains, will have them sent in late in the afternoon.

We aim to give you the best of everything—

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

October has opened auspiciously. The weather has been glorious—bright, sunny days, clear, cold nights, just suited for improving the quality of cut flowers. There has been no frost worth mentioning, so that the supply is necessarily ahead of the demand. The improvement in business, both shipping and local, is shown in the brisk demand for really choice stock of many varieties. Dahlias are still the leading flowers. Among dahlias Jack Rose has come to the front with a rush. The splendid crimson flowers are borne on long, stiff stems, fully three feet in length, making an ideal dahlia for cutting. The price for this variety exceeds listed quotations.

Chrysanthemums have made their appearance. Monrovia, Golden Glow, October Frost, Mrs. George W. Kalb, Glory of the Pacific and Polly Rose are the leading varieties. They are a welcome addition to the list, and so far are much in demand for the October weddings.

Asters are still with us, though it is believed this week will pretty nearly see the end of the crop. Cosmos is fine and plentiful in all the colors. Single violets are improving and doubles have made their appearance, Lady Hume Campbell being the variety.

Gardenias are scarce and command high prices. Cattleyas can be obtained in quantity, but are being held back for expected demands.

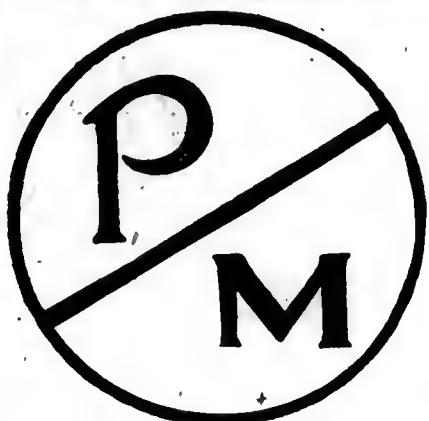

Carnations have improved immensely and are now selling briskly in certain quarters. White has been much scarcer than colors. Really fancy roses of the tea and hybrid tea classes have moved up, but really fancy blooms are scarce. Poor roses are overabundant. Greens are not selling well.

There has been a marked demand locally for yellow and blue, the city colors. For the former, dahlias and yellow daisies are preferred; for the latter, single violets and occasionally ageratum and cornflower. Valley has been selling briskly.

Club Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Florists' Club was held on Tuesday, October 6, in Horticultural hall and was well attended. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Fred Hahman; vice-president, Israel Rosnosky; treasurer, George Craig; secretary, David Rust. J. Otto Thilow gave a beautifully illustrated lecture on "Civic Improvements," which was much appreciated by the members.

Henry A. Dreer exhibited a fine white dahlia, named Dreer's White, and a fern, North Wales.

Eugene Bernheimer said, in his engaging way, that the greenhouses at North Wales were well worth seeing. And when Mr. Bernheimer wants you to do a thing, it is difficult indeed not to do it. So Benjamin Gibbs, Mr. Bernheimer's right hand man, was consulted as to the exact psychological moment for such a visit. Mr. Gibbs chose the time so well that a perfect day and a galaxy of floral lights were there at one and the same time. David Fuerstenberg, whose creative genius has made the Florex Gardens; Henry C. Geiger, whose painstaking care prevents leakage at the Florex Gardens; Eugene Bernheimer, whose energy and enthusiasm puts life into the Florex Gardens; George Samtman, under whose knowledge and skill the plants thrive at the Florex Gardens, all were there. Each vied with the other in courtesy and in willingness to discuss the hundred and one points of interest.

The Florex Gardens have vastly improved since the incipient stage of a year and a quarter ago; additional buildings have been put up, grounds laid out, rubbish cleared away, new glass added; in fact, everything has been done that could be done to put the place in first-class condition. The Florex Gardens today consist of the mammoth house so well known, containing 45,000 American Beauty rose plants, one-half in solid beds (these are in their second year), the other half young plants in benches; and two houses of smaller dimensions, partitioned in the middle, one and a half planted in carnations, the remaining half in Beauties, increasing the total number of the queen of roses to 47,000. The Beauties, Mr. Samtman said, were far finer than at this time last year; the plants showed remarkable vigor throughout the summer and are now of good size, well set with buds.

The roof of the mammoth house has been repainted. The carnations were a thrifty looking lot of indoor-grown stock. White, soft pink, bright pink and scarlet were represented by White Perfection, Enchantress, Winsor and Beacon respectively. Queen and Boston Market are also grown in a limited way. An interesting batch of seedlings showed vigor.

The greenhouses are heated by three marine boilers. The fourth will be added this month. The experience of the past season, Mr. Samtman said, enabled them to keep the temperature even throughout the mammoth house without difficulty. A tidy potting shed adjoins the carnation range and next to it a shed for tools and fertilizers, which is a model in its way. A place for everything and everything in its place; wood ashes, bone, blood, shovels, each had its bin or rack, no rubbish anywhere. The office building, facing the railroad station, expresses substantial business comfort. It is of brick, with wide doorway reached by stone steps; offices, packing-room, cooling-room, every detail carefully planned and executed. From this building Beauties and carnations daily start on their way to flower buyers in nearly all the principal cities of the east.

BOSTON.

The Market.

At last some slight betterment in market conditions is noticeable. There is a perceptible falling off in supplies of outdoor flowers, killing frost on the morning of October 3 finishing tender plants in many places. Roses are still selling abnormally low for the season. Beauties clean out well, but most other varieties are sluggish. With street fakers offering nice Brides and Maids at 10 cents per dozen, an idea of prevailing prices can be formed. Killarney is coming of good quality and Richmond also is improving in size and length of stem. Carnations are selling only moderately well, but should improve now that the aster avalanche is nearing its end. The violets seen are mostly single, but are not in much demand yet. Chrysanthemums are chiefly Golden Glow, Monrovia and Marquis de Montmort. Polly Rose and Glory of Pacific also appeared this week from several growers. These sell fairly well, better than the mid-season sorts are likely to a month hence.

vase of White Killarney shown by Waban Conservatories through their agent, W. W. Hathaway, secured a first-class certificate. Farquhar & Co. had a big and unique dahlia display. Some of the leading dahlia prize winners were: J. K. Alexander, Mrs. H. A. Jahn, W. D. Hathaway, F. L. Tinkham, George H. Walker and many others. There were no less than sixteen entries for display of cactus varieties and nearly as many in the other dahlia classes.

The mean temperature for September in Boston was 66 degrees, against an average for thirty years of 63 degrees. The rainfall was only .68 of an inch; a year ago we had 7.63 inches. There were thirteen clear days, ten cloudy and seven partly cloudy.

Farquhar & Co. report bulb trade as ahead of last year. They bought heavily, but orders coming in promise to soon exhaust the stock. The late killing frost has stimulated buying.

Galvin's window displays of dahlias from W. W. Rawson & Co. have been attractive and instructive for some time past.

F. J. Dolansky is marketing some fine Monrovia chrysanthemums. He also has a good line of ficus and other foliage plants, in charge of Thomas Pegler, at the Park Street market.

There will be no contest now over the will of the late W. W. Rawson. The prospective fight of grandchildren has been dropped, Herbert W. Rawson being appointed trustee of their estate.

Recent visitors include J. R. Fotheringham, representing F. R. Pierson Co., and Louis Dupuy, Whitestone, L. I.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. report a decided improvement in business. They are receiving some splendid southern smilax, and the cut flower department is picking up nicely.

Thomas Roland, of Nahant, will, among other stock, have a magnificent lot of cyclamens right for Christmas.

H. A. Jahn reports the Lloyd carnation as doing splendidly with him. It looks promising on several other places where recently seen. W. N. CRAIG.

VERBENAS AS MARKET PLANTS.

It is remarkable how well Verbena Miss Willmott has been received by the florists and decorators, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser (English). We hear of improved varieties, such as Kew Pink, The King, etc., but in the market they all sold as "Willmotts." Most growers are careful in selecting stock, and some have a decided improvement, yet I have noted some of a pale shade of color. Here we again see the advantage of careful selection. Culture also makes a great difference. Verbenas must have all the light possible, also plenty of top air, but they do not like a cold draught passing between them. They do best on a cool, moist bottom, with light and a little warmth above. For early flowering several plants may be grown together in each pot, and these come into flower much sooner than those which have to be stopped several times to get good, bushy plants. Manure water may be used freely.

Some growers have tried various other sorts, and they may sell well for home nursery trade, but they are of little use for market. Scarlet King sold fairly well last season, also Purple King and a white variety, but for the mixed colors there is practically no demand.

ARGENTA, ARK.—At the Vestal greenhouses here a new brick stack has been erected, sixty-five feet high and three feet inside diameter.

FORT DODGE, IA.—The North Floral Co. has made official announcement of its incorporation, with authorized capital stock of $10,000, of which $3,000 has been paid in cash, the balance to be issued as the needs of the business demand. The corporation is to continue for twenty years, unless sooner dissolved by a two-thirds vote of the stockholders. The limit of indebtedness is two-thirds of the capital stock, the private property of stockholders being exempt from corporation debts. The president is Otto Hansen, Elmer E. Nordwall being secretary and treasurer.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Watson S. Woodruff, Orange, Conn.;
First Vice-pres., J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland.

THE first new corn arrived at Chicago October 5.

H. W. BUCKBEE, Rockford, had an exhibit at the Illinois State Fair at Springfield last week and was awarded first premium on seeds, also a diploma.

THE anticipated contest over the will of the late W. W. Rawson, Boston, will not materialize. H. W. Rawson has been appointed trustee for the interests of the grandchildren.

THE corn crop, for seed purposes, is quite a way ahead of early estimates and being helped by every day of good weather. September was an unusually favorable month in the western district.

IT is figured that the planters have heard enough of the shortage of seed crops so that the best orders for 1909 will come early this year, and catalogue houses are hastening the completion of their books.

AT Chicago, October 6, October timothy seed sold at $3.50 and the tone of the market was a shade firmer. Country lots were quoted $2.25 to $3.40. Clover seed was 10 cents lower; October, $9, and cash seed, $7.50 to $9. At Toledo clover was, cash, $5.47½; October, $5.45; December, $5.52½; March, $5.65.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & Co. say the crops of their new Spencer sweet peas have turned out quite a little bit shorter than they estimated, and they hardly think now that they are going to be able to offer these to the American trade, as orders from abroad are coming in so fast that it looks as if they will shortly be obliged to report "sold out" on all three new Spencers.

IT is reported that the dry weather at Rocky Ford, Colo., injured the stand and cut the crop materially short, but the late rains improved the crop. A large portion of the best cantaloupes has been saved for seed. Dr. Van Buskirk is one of a number of growers who save seed and sell direct to planters all over the country through advertising in farm papers. D. V. Burrell, who grows for the trade, increased his acreage this year.

VISITED CHICAGO: John Michie, with H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.; Mr. Currie, of Currie Bros., Milwaukee.

IN the fire which recently destroyed the Henry Mayer building, in Erie, Pa., the E. E. Thielman Seed Co. suffered a loss of $10,000.

THE success which has attended the growing of onion seed in certain localities in the vicinity of Chicago and in Ohio this year will be likely to result in a larger acreage next season.

THERE is a difference of opinion on the catalogue policy for 1909. Some houses feel that seeds will sell themselves, in a measure, next year and that the expense for catalogues can be cut down, while others recall that it was the consensus of opinion at the Seed Trade convention that the effects of a panic are apparent in the seed trade the second and third year, and are preparing to go out after a larger share of the business available.

IT always is a question if seed supplies will be as short as crop reports would indicate—it not infrequently happens that good lots of scarce items are on offer late in the season. Onion, as a result of good yield, appears rather more plentiful than the limited acreage had at first indicated, but all offerings of standard varieties are promptly taken up. Vine seeds will be short, peas also, and it hardly can be said of any item that an abundant crop is available. But there will be seeds for sale, of course.

CALIFORNIA SEED CROPS.

A. J. Pieters, writing at Hollister, Cal., September 30, had the following to say of conditions in the seed-growing district:

"Seed crops are pretty well cleaned up for this season and the growers know where they stand on the matter of deliveries. I presume we are as late as any, this section being rather cooler than the main body of the Santa Clara valley, and so we do not get our crops off quite as early. We are through with the threshing, however, except carrot, the threshing of which is in progress.

"In regard to the yield, this has been fair to good. We have been much disappointed in the yield of lettuce, some varieties being attacked by a disease which caused considerable damage. Onion promises well, or, rather, we should say, has turned out well, since practically all is now cleaned. There will, we understand, be some short deliveries, but, generally, the crop has turned out a good average, so that full deliveries should be the rule.

"Sweet peas have turned out rather below our previous estimates, as a hot wind, that came as the peas were nearly ripe, caused many seeds to be shrunken, and to get a good sample we have to blow out a great deal of slightly shrunken seed.

"At present we are, of course, getting ready for another year's work. The onion bulbs so far received by the growers generally seem to be of fine quality and there will be enough of the standard sorts to plant a reasonable acreage. We do not look for the prices for the 1909 crop that have prevailed during the last two years. It is to be hoped, however, that prices will be reasonable and will remain so, as that is to the advantage of both grower and dealer.

"It is to be presumed that the usual acreage of annual crops will be put in and, of course, there is nothing to be said about them at present. The writer feels impelled, though, to wonder why contracts for the annuals are not placed earlier than is the practice at present. The growers here must plant radish and sweet peas very early in order to insure a crop, and it would seem that the earlier orders are in the better chance the dealer has for full delivery."

ONION SETS AT LOUISVILLE.

From Louisville, Ky., comes the report that onion set growers and shippers now agree that the crop of onion sets as a whole produced there this season is undoubtedly ten to twenty per cent short. Some of the big growers hold to the opinion that the shortage, compared with last year, is even greater and there is no question but the white variety is a third less than in 1907.

The growers are holding their supplies pretty generally, which has had a tendency to curtail heavy shipments. Big buyers are seeking other markets. Even one of the large operators there last week bought a big block of sets in another section to cover future delivery orders.

Prices have ruled high all season, but are beginning to moderate somewhat and there is indication of a weaker feeling, particularly among the dealers. Some of the big shippers have quit buying there except in a small way to fill immediate orders. Storage holdings in the hands of nearly all the operators are light. H. R. Whiteside is heavy in the deal again this year and has a large supply in his house at Louisville and at New Albany, Ind. However, his holdings are not nearly so great as they were at this time last season.

BRASLAN'S BRANCH OUT.

PALO ALTO, CAL.—The Braslan Seed Growers' Co., of San Jose, has decided to extend the scope of its operations by coming to Palo Alto with a portion of the enterprise. A tract of 800 acres, known as the Sweeny property, lying between the Flood place and Ravenswood, has been leased by this company for a five-year period, and the entire tract will be cultivated. A force of forty men is already at work cleaning up the property and getting ready for active operations. There are homestead buildings in good condition which will meet all present requirements without erecting other structures.

C. P. Braslan, the president of the company, has spent several days here completing arrangements. He states that the Sweeny tract will be devoted to the growing of onions, lettuce, beet and flower seeds, with sweet pea seeds as a specialty. The land is well adapted to seed growing, being the rich alluvial land along the bay shore. The tract lies about a mile northeast of Palo Alto.

ASSIGNEE HENRY'S GOOD WORK

The affairs of the old firm of Clucas & Boddington Co., New York, were closed up September 30, so satisfactorily that Frank H. Henry, of Henry & Lee, who was the assignee, is well entitled to the little boost he gives himself in his final report to the creditors, as follows:

"As assignee for the benefit of creditors of the Clucas & Boddington Co., I send you herewith inclosed check to your order in payment of the sum awarded to you by the court, the same being the final dividend of 15% per cent of your claim against the above company. With the payment of this dividend, you have received in the aggregate 30% per cent of your claim.

"While I have accounted to the court in detail for all moneys received and disbursed by me, as assignee, and have had my accounts in all respects approved, I know that the creditors have not taken the time to examine them, and hence take this opportunity of giving them a brief summary of my acts as assignee of the estate.

"I was made assignee September 7, 1905, and at once took possession of the assets, which consisted of outstanding accounts (most of which were of doubtful worth), a small quantity of seeds and bulbs, a few articles of office furniture, and thirty acres of land at Sparkill,

N. Y., where the company had carried on its nursery.

"The above real estate had growing upon it plants, shrubs and trees, which were appraised at $2,250. The greater portion of this growing stock, however, in order to be preserved during the approaching winter, had to be kept in hot-houses under artificial temperature at a considerable expense. The real estate and the nursery stock growing upon it were covered by a first and second mortgage aggregating $7,575, the interest on which and also the taxes of $150 were in arrears. As the land was threatened with foreclosure, and as a considerable expense would necessarily be incurred in caring for the nursery stock during the winter, I took immediate steps to realize on these assets, and by constant effort succeeded in selling them and realized for the estate the sum of $4,207.68.

"While the actual value of the entire assets of the estate at a fair valuation, as shown by the inventory and schedules filed in court, was $4,542.32, the total sum realized by me amounted to the sum of $9,169.16. The amount paid by me for legal services, clerk hire, referee's fees, my commissions, printing notices

GROUND FOR GLADIOLI.

I am now harvesting the finest crop of gladiolus bulbs I ever grew, notwithstanding they have not had a soaking rain since early in May, only light showers and not many of them during June, July and the fore part of August, and none since. A success or partial failure was never more plainly demonstrated than in the selection of ground this season for the culture of gladioli. I selected low swamp ground, only two to three feet to water, and used a fertilizer, potash, at the rate of 1,800 pounds to the acre, in the furrow, and had great success, as I marketed over 30,000 spikes during July and August at better prices than I got last year for just as good spikes. All this when you hear the cry of hard times so much. I had a few thousand bulbs in my garden, which is upland, and although I watered and cultivated them many times I was not able to cut a good spike after July 20, and the bulbs are not nearly so large as those in the low ground.

ERFURT SEED AND PLANT TRADE.

and Management.

Writing from Weimar, Consul Will L. Lowrie, says that Erfurt, a thriving commercial city of southern Prussia, with more than 100,000 inhabitants, is known throughout Germany as the "flower city." It has a world-wide reputation for flower and farm seeds and plants, the trade in which the consul portrays as follows:

"The declared exports of these products to the United States in the last ten years amount to $561,741, last year's shipments being worth $53,888.

"The origin of the industry dates from the tenth century, and it was developed by the monks of the Peters monastery. The growth to the present large proportions is of much more recent date. Since 1880 the business of producing flower and garden seeds and plants in Erfurt has increased rapidly, until it is now five times as large as it was a quarter of a century ago. When the land failed to produce good wine grapes, the people turned their attention to the seed industry as a means of saving their waning fortunes. In former years the hills about Erfurt and Jena were famous for their vineyards. The wine was sold mostly at Weimar, about halfway between those two cities, giving this place its original name of 'Weinmarkt,' which was changed later to Weimar.

Extent of Industry.

"The soil about Erfurt is especially adapted to the culture of vegetables and plants. It is deep, rich, and well watered. The annual rainfall is heavy, and the surrounding hills afford good protection from the cool winds which sometimes sweep down from the Thuringerwald. There are 108 concerns engaged in the seed industry, also thirty-five seed exporters and twenty-four florists. An idea of the extent of this business may be gained from the area of glass employed. The total is 113,735 square meters (the square meter equals 10.764 square feet), of which 30,867 square meters cover propagating houses and 82,858 square meters are used over specially fertilized beds. Nearly 3,000 people are employed in various capacities.

"While there are no statistics available in regard to the total annual output of the Erfurt seed and plant concerns, a single firm produces each year 70,000 to 80,000 cyclamen, 400,000 lilies of the valley, 60,000 apple sprouts, in pots; 20,000 pear sprouts, 10,000 plum, apricot, peach and quince sprouts; 30,000 strawberry plants, 300,000 short-stemmed and 40,000 long-stemmed roses. "About 2,000 acres of land in the city and the immediate vicinity are devoted to gardens. This land is owned by the Crown, the city and private individuals.
It is leased to the various concerns at rentals depending on the location and on the productiveness of the soil. Owing to the rapid growth of the city, which rivals the percentage of a western "boom" town in the United States, quite an area of the best garden land has been plotted into city lots and is fast being covered with fine villas and houses.

Varieties Grown.

"The cultivation of the gillyflower in Erfurt dates from 1810. It first appeared in the window of a citizen, and from this one pot hundreds of thousands of these flowers have been propagated.
The estimated annual production is 680,- 000 plants. To the same extent, or nearly so, is the cultivation of the cal-ceolaria, verbenas, petunia, gloxinia, zinnia, pansy, carnation, balsam, phlox, hollyhock, pelargonium, fuchsia, azalea, etc., in almost endless variety. It is estimated that the annual output of flower seeds is not much under 1,000,000 marks or $238,000.

"Vegetable and farm seeds are cultivated in large quantities and in great variety. Among them are included 101 kinds of peas, 168 of beans (700 bushels were shipped this year to Boston to help make up the deficit in its staple food), 269 varieties of kitchen herbs, thirty-eight kinds of radishes and thirty of other roots, thirty-four of onions, etc., sixty-five of grass for fodder, thirty of clover, 320 species of potatoes. There are 1,542 varieties of vegetable seed cultivated in Erfurt."

PEDIGREED COTTON SEED.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued, as Farmers' Bulletin No. 333, by W. A. Orton, an account of the work in breeding cotton to resist the wilt which, under various names, affects the cotton crops over large areas. The bulletin concludes:

"The question of distributing wilt-resistant seed in such a way that all sections may receive benefit from the work of the Bureau of Plant Industry is an important one. It is evidently out of the question for the Department of Agriculture to send seed to all who need it in sufficient quantity to plant their crops.
The only solution of the difficulty is to encourage local breeders to grow and offer seed for sale.

"To this end the Department of Agriculture has begun to send out seed to men who have been ascertained by previous correspondence to have wilt-infected land and to be willing to care for the seed. The quantity given to each is one-half bushel, enough so that if planted with care at least a bale of cotton can be raised; then this cotton can be taken to the gin and the seed saved free from mixture with other kinds.

"Those receiving this wilt-resistant seed are expected to heed the advice given in this bulletin to keep the seed pure and sell to their neighbors. At the present time this wilt-resistant cotton is included in the congressional distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture, so that farmers desiring to obtain it should make application through their member of congress. The quantity available for each congressional district will be quite limited."

PITTSBURG.The Market.

The sesquicentennial week in this city was one continuous round of excitement. The city probably never saw greater crowds. However, besides losing one whole day's business on the day of the parade, the whole week's business was interfered with. With the exception of a few receptions given for some of the more important visitors, the trade did not receive any immediate benefit.

The general business continues to improve, however, and everyone is hopeful. There have been frosts several nights, but not quite enough to kill all the outside flowers, and, while it may be selfish, there are many who think they have lasted long enough this year and should step aside, as chrysanthemums are now here in full blast, including Bergmann, Monrovia, October Sunshine, Polly Rose and Pacific. These, with Beauties, lilies, roses, orchids and carnations, will supply every want, and more if the outside stock does not disappear.

Sunday, October 4, was like a day in June. The parks were crowded with Pure white; immense flowers.Gigantic Snowflake. The largest of all white Cyclamen.Gigantic Cherry-red. Most brilliant and effective.Gigantic Rose. Immense flowers of a pleasing shade of light rose.Gigantic Pink. Exquisite shade of soft pink.Gigantic Crimson. Most striking color; under artificial light appears to be almost luminous.Gigantic Crimson and White. A magnificent flower of the largest type.Gigantic Syringe Blue. (New.) A charming color.Gigantic Lilac. A very pleasing color, lighting up well at night.

Any of the above varieties, trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50; per 1000, $12.00.

Gigantic Mixed. A mixture of all the above varieties in proper proportion. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.25; 1000 seeds, $10.00.PRINCESS MAY. A very pretty type of Cyclamen. Color, pink with suffused blotches of crimson at base of petals. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.SALMON QUEEN. Undoubtedly one of the most distinct and beautiful salmon colors found in cyclamen. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.Cyclamen giganteum Salmonium splendens. The finest salmon-pink variety. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.

people and the plants looked much better than one would expect. Now, these conditions must stop before the trade will be right. The retail stores all admit that their regular trade, outside of funeral work, is improving from day to day, and they are awaiting the time when people cannot go out and get a little bunch in their gardens to keep their tables presentable.

Sesquicentennial Week.

The florists all put on a good front for the holiday week. Mrs. E. A. Williams' store particularly attracted attention, being handsomely festooned with laurel and decorated with flags outside, but the window was the piece de resistance, being artistically arranged with yellow crotons, a vase of yellow oncidium and a background of cibotium. As yellow and black were the city's colors, the display attracted more than ordinary attention and interest.

A. W. Smith also made a handsome outside decoration of yellow and black, with American flags, and had his windows appropriately trimmed. There was an arch, showing fine electric effects, just at the entrance.

Randolph & McClements, the Zieger Co. and Blind & Bros., in the east end, took advantage of the fact that their conservatories are along the street front, and made exhibits of plants that were worth going out of the way to see.

The city parks were represented in the parade by a float showing a garden, with beds of flowers and plants. The city colors were flying from the corner poles. The garden hose and lawn mowers were conspicuous and it was surrounded by marching men carrying park implements. It was quite unique, eliciting many admiring comments along the line.

The committee that arranged for and decorated the florists' float deserves great credit, as among the many floats, some costing several thousand dollars, theirs called forth as many compliments as any, being cheered all along the line. It represented an Indian maiden in a canoe, coming out of the primeval forest and wild flowers into a garden of the present day, luxuriant with yellow roses. The sides of the float were festooned with garlands of laurel, and beautiful pennants of the city colors floated from the front standards of the float. It was hauled by six beautiful horses, each led by a postilion wearing a black coat and yellow vest and knee breeches, after the style of Father Pitt. Every detail was perfect and a credit to the trade.

Various Notes.

Mrs. Jacob Elicker, of Homestead, had a fire Friday, October 2, which damaged the upper and rear portion of the store. However, they are still able to take care of their business while the repairs are going on.

Among the visitors the last week were Miss Margaret Schneider and Mr. and Mrs. Schaffer, Johnstown, Pa.; Miss Leizmann, Latrobe, Pa.; W. R. McKean and Joseph Haube, Charleroi, Pa.; Geo. L. Huscroft, Steubenville, O.; N. C. Zoeller, Wellsville, O.

A. E. McCoyd, of the Arcade, closed his stand on the day of the parade and armed himself with a bladder on a stick to protect his glass cases from the crowd. They kept him busy and he seemed to be getting lots of fun out of his job.

Hoo-Hoo.

I HAVE only been a subscriber to the REVIEW for about four months, but I estimate it has saved me at least $25 in cash, paid out for stock, and I consider it the best publication I receive.—W. K. FLETCHER, Des Moines, Ia.

PACIFIC COAST.

BELLINGHAM, WASH.—Five tons of fancy bulbs, including narcissi, hyacinths and tulips, have been received for the new government station located in the Marrietta road. The work of fall planting is well under way.

TACOMA, WASH.—Seymour conservatory, the new structure in Wright park, has been completed, and a large number of plants, flowers and shrubs are being moved into it, under the direction of the park supervisor, E. R. Davenport. It is said that some of the plants are quite rare and that the collection, as a whole, will be one of the most valuable on the Pacific coast. The conservatory was constructed at a cost of $10,000, donated by W. W. Seymour, a prominent local capitalist.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather has turned somewhat cooler and business can be said to be a shade better. Flowers are scarcer now than at any time since last winter. The early crops from the recently planted carnation houses have been well gathered and the slower coming crops are not yet at hand. Roses are in short supply yet, but, from appearances, they will soon be plentiful. Asters are completely out of season and chrysanthemums are getting easier in price. Violets are in just about sufficient quantity to fill requirements. They will be in much better condition when they have had a few more showers. Sweet peas are of little value to the florist at present. The stems are getting short and the flowers drop easily.

Cut asparagus is getting scarcer, most of the big patches having been well cut. Smilax, although early in its season, is being brought into town in fair quantity. Outside dahlias are being used in large quantities for decorative purposes. There has been a great improvement in the quality of the blossoms offered for sale this year as compared with those of former years, and as a consequence the dahlia has taken its place among the most useful fall flowers.

The demand for all classes of stock is on the increase and October gives promise of being as busy a month as it was a year ago. Funeral work has occupied the attention almost entirely of some of our retailers for the last few days.

Various Notes.

John Gill is on a business trip to the southern portion of the state.

M. H. McCowen, formerly with Clarke Bros., of Oakland, is now associated with Chester P. Hutchinson, of Berkeley, Cal.

E. Bourguignon, of San Jose, is in town for a few days.

Charles Leopold, one of San Francisco's veteran florists, will have charge of the new retail store of the Thorsted Floral Co., of Oakland.

IMPROVEMENT IN THE DAHLIA.

There has probably been no flower within recent years that has been so greatly perfected in California, and has proven so valuable to the decorator and florist, as the dahlia. Originally used exclusively for garden decoration and never considered choice enough to be cut and offered for sale in the shops, it has within the last two years taken a place at the head of the fall blooming flowers. It has almost crowded the chrysanthemum to the wall and has left it far behind as a decorative feature on well kept grounds.

The reasons for this are many, but easy to discover. Dahlia specialists have been more active in the last few years than almost any other branch of the profession and, as a result, the old-fashioned, stiff, heavy flowers have been superseded by delicate, graceful, magnificantly colored blossoms, borne on long, straight, stiff stems—just the long-desired want of the critical public.

The dahlia has the advantage, again, of being of the easiest culture, requiring little or no care, as long as ordinarily rich soil, plenty of moisture and a reasonable situation are given. With the chrysanthemum, if anything except mediocre blossoms are desired, a great deal of time and attention have to be given for a limited quantity of blossoms. The season of flowering in our favored California climate is from three to five months and even longer, while a few weeks is all that can be expected from any of the chrysanthemum family.

I refer here, of course, entirely to the dahlia as a garden flower and do not reflect on the mum blossoms grown under glass, where comparisons cannot be made.

As a flower to be used to advantage in floral designs the dahlia has few superiors, although it does not last as long as the carnation.

The public has shown conclusively in the last two seasons that the newer varieties of dahlias will be used extensively in house and table decorations, and growers should provide themselves with a stock sufficient to be relied on for cut-

Stock continues to be scarce and there is enough business to use it all up at good prices. The market is about cleaned out every day and that tends to hold prices up to the top notch. But I cannot say that the business is anything to brag of, for if it were not for the fact that flowers are so scarce there would not be enough business to hold the prices up. All the storemen report trade as quiet. The wholesale men, however, are doing well. There is just enough stock coming in to make their returns average up satisfactorily.

Roses constitute the main flower on the market now. The cool weather which is with us now has done them worlds of good. The stock is first-class and brings a good price. Beauties take the lead and the price of them is slowly advancing, so that it will soon be what it ought to be. Carnations are scarce and bring a good price. The out-of-town demand for them is good and that helps to keep the market cleaned out of all that come in. Mums are beginning to be more in evidence and their quality is much better, too. White is in heaviest supply, with yellow second and but very few pink. Three dollars per dozen is about the top price, and for the quality of goods it is a good price.

The market is well supplied with green goods and the demand is good, too.

Outdoor flowers were frozen last week, so we have about seen the last of the o'clock, at the greenhouses of Max Rudolph, on College Hill. It is expected that this will bring out a large percentage of the members, not only from interest in the meeting, but from the opportunity it offers to see Mr. Rudolph's model plant.

William Gardner, of Weiland & Olinger, is receiving congratulations on all sides. It's a boy, and the father is mighty proud.

J. T. Conger and wife have just returned from their trip through the west. They report that they have had a fine time and have been much impressed with the general prosperity through that part of the country. As with everyone who visits the west, they are already planning to go back again next year, to get better acquainted. C. J. OHMER.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., O. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

JOHN H. DAYTON, secretary of the Storrs & Harrison Co., Painesville, O., was nominated for congress by the Prohibitionists of the twentieth district at a convention held at Cleveland September 29.

THE peony season made a better record than many expected; the popularity of the flower does not appear to be in the least bit impaired and the "boom" has not burst, for fall shipments have been large, total sales probably as great as in any preceding year.

THE Ellwanger will case at Rochester has not yet been settled, after a long legal battle. A date has now been set for hearing of the protest made by heirs of George Ellwanger against the issuance of letters testamentary on the will of the dead nurseryman to his son, William D. Ellwanger.

EVERGREENS FOR VASES.

Kindly state what kind of hardy evergreen plants would be suited to fill in large vases during the winter months in Ohio. C. L. R.

For keeping outdoors the following are suitable varieties for your climate: Retinospora plumosa, R. plumosa aurea, R. pisifera and R. squarrosa Veitchii; Thuya occidentalis, Arbor-vitæ; Tsuga Canadensis, hemlock; Picea alba, white spruce; Picea excelsa, Norway spruce; Juniperus Virginiana, red cedar; Abies balsamea, balsam fir. For use indoors the bay trees and box, Buxus arborescens, will be found good. The retinosporas will probably suit you as well as anything for vases of moderate size. Any of the trees and shrubs named will do indoors and will last better if not subjected to much fire heat.

W. N. CRAIG.

TROUBLE WITH CEDRUS DEODARA

Under separate cover I am sending some branches of Cedrus Deodara. The tree from which they are taken is fifty feet tall and about twenty-five feet in spread, and is planted in a circular bed about six feet in diameter, with a cement walk five feet wide surrounding the bed. This walk at present is completely covered by the branches of the cedar. Three months ago, on finding that water settled and became stagnant, a breeding place for mosquitoes, a slight trench one and one-half to two inches wide was made on the edge of the bed to allow the surplus water to run off into the ground. Since that time the branches have started to turn yellow and then to die completely. Immense branches have had to be cut out, marring a beautiful specimen. Is it some disease, or lack of moisture? W. W. C.

The shoots sent are entirely dead, and if many of the branches of the tree are in the same way, its condition must be indeed desperate. We do not see what special difference the running off of the surface water should have made to the tree; more probably the 5-foot cement walk surrounding it is the cause of the trouble. This naturally keeps the water from a large section of what ought to be the best rooting surface. Unless your customer has some special reason for retaining this walk, we would advise breaking it up, cleaning away all the cement and stone and replacing with good loam. No doubt the tree is being starved and this additional source of food supply will stimulate it, if it is not too far gone. C. W.

were William A. Bond, James H. Van Vlissingen and Aaron M. McKay. The property in question is one of the most beautiful pieces about the city. It is the site of Peterson Nursery. Mr. Peterson's holdings embrace about 450 acres. The tract through which the canal will pass lies between Bryn Mawr and Peterson avenues north and south and California on the east and Central Park avenue on the west. The Sanitary District sought to acquire a right of way 660 feet wide, containing 46.95 acres, through the center of this tract, running in a north-easterly and southwesterly direction. A number of hearings were held by the arbitrators in the rooms of the Sanitary District, testimony being introduced by J. C. Williams, attorney for the district, and Thomas G. Deering, attorney for Mr. Peterson. Among those called upon by the Sanitary District were Anton Pregler, Andrew J. Smith, Henry Severin and Frank Lohenrich. Mr. Peterson called as experts on land values Samuel Brown, Jr., William J. Moore, Martin H. Kilgallen, and as to the natural beauty Jens Jansen, of the West Park system. Parts of forty days' time were consumed and over 1,000 pages of testimony taken. As in all such cases, there was a wide difference of opinion. Acres in that locality were valued at $750 to $1,600. Anton Pregler approximated the benefits that would accrue to adjacent property through the cutting of this channel at $551,000. On the other hand, a witness on behalf of Mr. Peterson placed the damage to the rest of his property at $196,000. After the hearing the arbitrators made protracted investigations for themselves as to the value and particularly as to the effect of taking the land and the construction of the channel through Mr. Peterson's holdings at that point. The arbitrators finally determined upon a verdict of $57,148 or about $1,220 an acre for the land taken, the damages to the residue being placed at $30,910, making a total of $88,058.

BLEACHING CELERY.

I have 20,000 head of celery, Winter Queen and Giant Pascal, and I should like to bleach it with soil. Can I do this? If so, will soil rot celery by getting in the heart of it? We have nine inches of black soil and clay subsoil. When should I start to hill up? H. B.

Yes, you can bleach the celery with soil if the rows are from four feet six inches to five feet apart. If the work is properly done, the plants will not rot after this time of year. As to the time to start hilling, that is a matter of judgment. I am beginning now, but later may be better.

It requires education, experience and sound judgment to bleach and store celery so as to realize a fair profit.

O. A. OLIVER.

MAKING A MUSHROOM BED.

I wish to know if the soil on top of a mushroom bed should be kept moist. I spawned my first bed August 9. I have sprinkled it several times, but the soil is always dry, though the spawn itself is soft and can be broken easily. The bed is made up in a chicken coop. I thought I ought to see some mushrooms by this time, but the trouble may be in using sawdust manure, of which the bed is made. J. L. T.

I am sorry to have to discourage you with your mushrooms, but I am afraid you will have but poor returns. The manure being mixed with sawdust is enough in itself to cause failure, as it is sure to contain resin and other injurious ingredients. The fact that the bed continues to dry out shows that the atmospheric conditions of the chicken house are also at fault. Mushrooms require a moist atmosphere—moist enough to maintain sufficient dampness in the bed to obviate the necessity of watering, providing your material contained the proper amount of moisture at the time of making up and was made of sufficient depth to have body enough to retain the moisture.

In a properly constructed mushroom house a depth of eight inches for the bed is sufficient, but where conditions are not altogether suitable it is safer to make the bed twelve inches deep, the larger body of material being better able to resist the drying influence of the atmospheric conditions. Sprinkling the walls and floor of the house frequently will help matters considerably, but it should never be necessary to apply water to the bed itself, as doing so invariably retards the progress of the spawn.

In making the next bed, procure manure from stables where only straw is used for bedding, and do not be too particular about shaking all the straw out of it, as a little straw is a benefit rather than a detriment to the material. Avoid another mistake which is often made, that of keeping the manure too long and turning and turning it until the virtue has all been worked out of it. Try to procure enough manure at one time to make your bed up. Throw it in a pile and let it heat, but not too violently. Then turn it over, working into it about one-quarter of good, friable loam; that is, three parts manure to one of loam.

A BED OF MUSHROOMS

Let this stand again till heat has generated; then proceed to make up your bed.

The soil absorbs and retains the ammonia and keeps the material from heating too violently, thus saving an essential chemical part of the material and allowing the bed to be made up without having to waste valuable time in working off the ammonia to prevent too violent heat.

In making the bed, the material should be moderately damp, but not too wet. If dry, it should be sprinkled with water until the proper moisture has been added. Pack firmly to prevent overheating. The bed, if conditions are right, should not rise to over 95 degrees. Allow it to fall to 80 degrees before inserting the spawn, and before putting on the covering of soil allow it to fall to 75 degrees. In about a week, or when the heat has declined to 65 degrees, a covering of straw should be put on, the amount being regulated as the temperature of the bed requires. If an overhead temperature of 55 degrees can be maintained, the covering need not be over three inches thick, but if the house falls lower, increase the covering accordingly. The bed itself, as indicated by a bottom heat thermometer, should maintain a temperature of from 60 to 65 degrees.

From five to six weeks from the time of spawning, an outlook should be kept for the appearance of the mushrooms, and when they begin to show freely the straw should be removed from the bed, so as not to hinder the development of the crop.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

VEGETABLES IN A LEAN-TO.

I would like to know if lettuce, radishes or onions could be grown in a greenhouse on a raised bench, the house being just one span, six feet to the ridge and attached to other houses. Mums are in the house now. Could we get a crop of vegetables for Christmas, or will they stay dormant and not be in crop until March? There is no heat in the house after December 1. H. D. H.

Yes, radishes, onions or lettuce will all do well in your lean-to house if it is well ventilated and a little heat can be had on cold nights to keep the temperature about 45 to 50 degrees. All three crops can be grown, if desired, as the same conditions suit them all.

Radishes of the Scarlet Globe forcing variety mature in winter in about five weeks from date of planting the seed, and green onions from good-sized sets require about the same time. It is well to set the date of planting a few days earlier, as the crop can be held back a few days for the purchaser, but cannot be sold at best prices if not marketable for the holidays. All markets are low for several days after any holiday creating a special demand.

Six weeks before Christmas is a good time to plant the beds to radishes and onions, but lettuce should have ten weeks from seed. The seed should be planted in flats and transplanted in about two weeks from date of planting the seed, into other flats, placing the plants about two inches apart. In two weeks more they are ready to plant in the beds, about eight inches apart, and will then be benched at the same date as the other crops, but having four weeks the start in order to mature at about the same time. NEW ORLEANS.

As we are nearing November, we can almost form an idea as to what the chrysanthemum crop will be. Although the season has been generally favorable, too much rain at one period of the growth has cut down many plants and many seem to be behind. We really believe that the market this year will be far from being overstocked. Mrs. Robinson, white, is the most seen in this vicinity. C. Holtz, a kind originated here, and at first grown extensively, has been disregarded as a disbudded chrysanthemum.

It is still a good sort to grow as a small flower for bunches, having taken the place of the old pompon which was the favorite some years ago.

W. Mohr lost his dahlias on account of too much rain. This flower, which was the queen of the All Saints' day flowers before the appearance of the large chrysanthemums, is not much seen now on the market. Still, the scarcity of it and the taste of many old people make it sometimes quite in demand.

M. J. Gurtlev, for a long time in business as a vegetable gardener, is trying his hand at chrysanthemums. His idea is to use his sashes for cucumbers and mums in rotation. The patch he has on hand is fine and compares well with any grown around here. M. M. L.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—The Arkansas State Floral Society has issued an advance premium list for the flower show to be held at Hotel Marion, November 11, 12 and 13. ST. PAUL.

The Market.

A drop of over 50 degrees in temperature in less than thirty-six hours, which occurred a week ago, was not conducive to best results in the greenhouses and all stock suffered in quality and quantity. A shortage of flowers has been apparent. Carnations have headed the list of scarce articles. Roses are also off crop and the demand is far ahead of the supply. Outdoor stock is all frozen. Asters were nearly a total failure this season.

Various Notes.

Azaleas are already in from Belgium and are of good quality. Dutch bulbs are also of good size and appearance.

President and Mrs. Wirth entertained the officers of the State Florists' Association a few evenings since. After dinner business matters pertaining to the winter's work and pleasure were discussed.

A. N. Kinsman, of Austin, was a recent caller. He lost nearly his entire range of greenhouses and their contents by a flood early in July, but has rebuilt and replanted the houses and is now shipping stock into this market. He estimates his loss at over $10,000. X. Y. Z.

HOLYOKE, MASS.

The firm of Field & Sinclair, which heretofore has jointly conducted the old Howland greenhouses in this city and a range of greenhouses in Northampton, was dissolved October 1 and the business was divided between the two members of the company. Mr. Field has taken charge of the Northampton store and greenhouses and Mr. Sinclair takes the Holyoke business. Mr. Sinclair was associated with Mr. Howland in Holyoke before he went to Northampton. He is of more than local prominence as a flower grower, having developed some new carnations, chrysanthemums and other flowers.

Melvin L. Graves, who has been manager of the Holyoke greenhouses since the firm bought them, is now associated with Mr. Field in Northampton, where he has lived while in his Holyoke position. Miss Anna Selkirk, who for a number of years has been looking after the store trade at the greenhouse, has resigned and is taking a commercial course in Springfield.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

That much-looked-for gentleman, Jack Frost, made his first appearance October 2 and helped the greenhouse men out nicely. Cosmos, dahlias and all flowers, except where they were protected by trees or buildings, are gone. The thermometer registered 28 to 30 degrees. Dahlias have been arriving in enormous quantities on the days when the wind and rain did not spoil them. The demands have been excellent, at prices that appear remunerative. Carnations are selling fairly well and some fine ones are seen in the windows. Roses are steadily improving and American Beauties, Killarney and My Maryland are in steady demand. Valley is cleaned up each day and is exceptionally fine. Callas made their appearance this week at the Exchange, as also did some fine mums from G. A. Lotz, of Glenburnie. Cosmos is scarce this season, due to the dry summer.

Various Notes.

Chas. Hamilton, Mt. Washington, has some extra fine carnations and expects to build another house this fall.

M. Richmond, of Erdman avenue, has rented a stall in Lexington market and had a fine display of dahlias and ferns October 3.

The park employees have begun to remove all the crotons which were planted in the parks and squares and are going to plant pansies in the vacant beds. They plant annually about 50,000 plants, as they prove more satisfactory than hyacinths and tulips.

There are few of the local florists who will handle bulbs for Easter, as it proved such a poor investment last Easter. Q.

ORCHIDS

Our latest importations have been, Cattleya Chryso-toxa, Cattleya Gaskelliana, Cattleya gigas (Hardyana district), Phalaenopsis amabilis, Schilleriana and others. We will receive in a short time, Cattleya Dowiana, Miltonia vexillaria and others. Later we expect for the first time in America an importation of Cattleya Lawrenceana. On hand we have an immense variety of established and semi-established plants, which we are selling now little above cost price.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

The frosts October 1 and 2 put all outdoor stock out of the way and reports are that business was good and stock scarce last week. Funeral work was plentiful. The cool nights also helped to shorten up the indoor crops; consequently everything brought a good price. Good carnations brought 2 to 3 cents. All mums sold readily.

Various Notes.

The regular monthly club meeting October 1 was well attended and things were interesting for some time. The local club coöperated this year with the State Board of Agriculture at the state fair grounds. It came to light that the wording and arranging of the premium list, judging, etc., could have been considerably improved upon, and to this end the president was empowered to appoint a committee of three to meet the state board sometime in the near future to call attention to the weak points and make suitable suggestions.

Nic Zweifel, of North Milwaukee, took to the northern woods, October 2, for a hunting and fishing trip.

Holton & Hunkel Co. is erecting a sash house 16x100 feet for storage purposes.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. is receiving some fine mums from its Wauwatosa plant.

Facts Worth Learning

LOOK, BROTHER MINE! LISTEN!

What GODFREY ASCHMANN, the Philadelphia Hustler, the great foreseer, has got to say. He never goes wrong.

HE PREDICTS GREAT PROSPERITY!

NOW BEFORE THE DOOR

You will sell everything you have at good prices. After a hot spell follows a cold one; after rain, sunshine; after a panic, money plentiful, and you have got a chance

TO FILL YOUR POCKETS IF YOU WISH TO DO SO.

ARE YOU PREPARED FOR THE RUSH?

Brother, think it over; it is high time. When will you start in? Now, of course. Waiting means suicide.

NOT ASLEEP.

We are well prepared to meet all demands. The Araucaria King means to sell his Araucarias, and the motto of the moveman means Keep a Moving. Eighteen years of experience of importing, growing, shipping and handling of Araucarias brings us in the foreground of any merchant in the business; so well known that any florist from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean can sing a song of Godfrey Aschmann's Araucarias.

CHEAPER THAN EVER—FERNS TO BEAT THE BAND.

Four houses full of choice Boston, Whitman and Scottii Ferns, 5, 5½, 6 and 7-in., all pot-grown, raised in snug houses which protect from stiff frosts; never were so fine as this year. Next on the program we carry a fine stock of choice Kentia Palms, Rubbers, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, etc., which stand a challenge with those of all the notable growers of America and Europe.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 tiers, 10 to 12 inches high, 40c; 5½-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 to 4 tiers, 12 to 15 inches high, 50c; 6-in. pots, 3 to 4 years old, 3, 4, 5 to 6 tiers, 16, 18, 20 to 22 inches high, 60c, 75c to $1.00 each.

Araucaria Robusta Compacta, 6-in. pots, 3 years old, 3 tiers, fine, beautiful plants, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, specimen plants; spring, 1907, importation; suitable for lawns or porches, 5 to 6 years old, 7-in. pots, 5 tiers, 25, 30, 35 to 40 inches high, same in width, beautiful plants, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 to $4.00 each.

Boston and Scottii ferns, 4-in., 20c; 5-in., 30c to 35c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c and 50c; 7-in. pots, as big as a bushel basket, 75c to $1.00. Scottii, 8 to 9-in. pans, made-up of 3 plants, 75c to $1.00 per pan. Whitman, 4-in., 20c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c and 50c. Whitman, in 8-in. pans, three large plants in a pan, 75c. Whitman, in 9-in. pans, 3 large plants in a pan, $1.00. We have a big stock of these varieties and they are pot, not bench, grown. Amerpohlii, 5-in., 30c, 35c to 40c.

Kentia Belmoreana, 5½ to 5½-in. pots, 25 to 30 inches high, 50c, 60c and 75c; 4-in., 20 inches high, 85c to 40c.

Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, a large one, about 40 inches high, in the center, surrounded by three smaller ones, $4.00 each.

Kentia Forsteriana, 6 to 7-in. pots, 36 inches high, $2.00; specimen, 7-in., 40 to 50 inches high, $2.50 to $3.00; 6-in., 30 inches high, $1.50; 6-in., 25 inches high, $1.00; 6-in., 20 to 25 inches high, 75c; 5 to 5½-in., 50c.

Cocos Weddelliana, bushy plants, 3-in., 15c, 18c and 20c; 4-in., 25c.

Ferns for Dishes, 2½-in., $4.00 per 100. A big stock, best assortment.

Cycas Revoluta, or Sago Palm, 6-in. to 7-in. pots, 5 to 20 leaves to a plant, 10c per leaf.

The Market.

Trade is beginning to show a decided improvement, as stock of all kinds is moving much better. Roses are coming in quite plentifully now and move at a good figure. Brides and Maids take the lead, as there have been a good many weddings lately, which make a good demand for Brides and valley. Maids, Richmond and Killarney are coming in slowly, but the outlook is good for a heavy crop shortly. Carnations are more plentiful, but the increasing demand makes them still scarce in this market.

Mums are beginning to make their appearance and we all welcome them. They are looking fine and promise to be better than last year. Some growers are growing single-stemmed ones exclusively. Others are growing them two to three to a plant, and the majority of the growers claim that they thus clean up more money to a square foot than growing single-stemmed. There is quite an increase of Bonnaillon this year, as it is an old favorite here with the growers, as well as with the public.

There are few flowers here outside of roses and carnations, as gladioli and asters are a thing of the past. So mums will be a welcome addition to our stock at this time.

Various Notes.

The Munk Floral Co. is cutting its first mums and the stock in general gives promise of a good crop.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. is cutting some fine Monrovia and its carnations are coming on in fine shape.

Word has been received from Albert Knopf, who is in California for his health, that he is improving steadily.

A Wonderful New Nephrolepis

Nephrolepis Superbissima

Introduction of 1908

We desire to call attention to this new fern, which originated with us and which we are introducing this year. It is a very unique and distinct novelty—as distinct from Nephrolepis Piersoni and Piersoni elegantissima as they were from Bostoniensis. It is, in fact, a complete break. The fronds are very heavily imbricated, the pinnae overlapping, making the fronds very dense and compact.

It differs from the other Nephrolepis not only in form, but also in color, being a richer and darker green—entirely different from the yellowish green of all the other Nephrolepis. The plant is very sturdy in its habit, the fronds never breaking down.

While a photograph shows a similarity to its predecessors, it is absolutely distinct, not only in the formation of the fronds and color, but also in its habit and general characteristics. It makes a much more dwarf and compact growth, the fronds being very dense, firm and rigid, and having a great deal more substance, so that it will stand more knocking around than any other fern of this type.

It is a sterling novelty. Experts who have seen it consider it by far the best fern ever sent out. It is a plant that needs to be seen to have its great value and sterling qualities appreciated. It really is not in the same class with the other varieties.

It was awarded a First-class Certificate by the Royal Horticultural Society at Crystal Palace in London, November, 1907, the plants exhibited there having been shipped from New York two weeks before that time. After being exhibited in London, the same plants were shipped to Edinburgh, Scotland, where they were again awarded a First-class Certificate by the Scottish Horticultural Society. This will indicate the value of the plant as a novelty, and also demonstrates in a very conclusive manner its fine keeping and shipping qualities.

We have just begun shipping advance orders, and new orders can now be shipped immediately on receipt.

Fine, strong plants, 2½-in. pots, $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100. 4-in. pots, $7.00 per doz.; $50.00 per 100. 6-in. pots, $1.50 each; $15.00 per doz.

ERIE, PA.

Current Comment.

After a long drought, which was the worst in the history of Pennsylvania, we had a refreshing rain on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. The forests had been burning near Oil City and there was danger of the oil wells igniting. Erie was cloudy with smoke from these large fires, and humanity was suffering for want of rain. In those exhausting days it was a blessing to have Lake Erie so close at hand. Vegetation is not so greatly benefited by the showers of last week, but the atmosphere is cooler, the fires quenched and the terrible dust allayed.

The local growers are receiving large shipments of Dutch bulbs from Europe this week.

Mr. Green, a representative of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, was in the city recently. He was stopping at the Reed House.

Ed Lichtinger is growing roses for Offerle & Schaal at present. His stock is looking well.

Miss Borden, saleslady at J. V. Laver's store, has returned from her vacation.

G. H. Baur left last week for Philadelphia, where he will resume his studies in the law department of the University of Pennsylvania. B. P.

WASHINGTON.

State of Trade.

Conditions are about the same, except the weather. We have had several frosts, but not severe enough to cut any figure with outdoor stock. Cosmos is fine, and there is lots of it. All stock is plentiful, with nobody working overtime.

The stores are making all sorts of efforts to attract the flower buyers. Z. D. Blackistone is advertising a dahlia show in connection with his annual palm sale. Geo. Shaffer has a school flag display; all the seminaries and private schools having special flags with school colors, makes an attractive display when all are grouped.

Various Notes.

The Washington Florists' Co. had a pretty design for one of the local theaters October 5. It was a yellow butterfly measuring about thirty inches, made of yellow dahlias and Richmond roses. It was for the play called the Golden Butterfly.

J. A. Phillips, the Fourteenth street florist, had a number of baskets and bunches of Beauties for Miss Smith, who named the new steamer, Southland, at Norfolk, Va., for the Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co. He also has just had a successful fern sale.

The Tuberculosis Congress, which is in session here, has made a call for quite a few flowers for luncheons, dinners, etc.

W. Marche, formerly with Z. D. Blackistone, will open a flower store at the corner of U and Eighteenth streets N. W., about October 15.

Vernon Ley has a sign up on Fourteenth street, notifying the public that he will open a flower store there in the near future.

J. Henry Small is in New York, taking the rest cure.

Fred Miller, of Gude's, has returned from a visit to Frederick, Md.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Louis Loose have returned from Milford, Conn., where they have been sojourning for three weeks.

William Mann, of Louisville, Ky., stopped over on his way home from Boston and New York.

Adolphus Gude, Anacostia, D. C., Tuesday evening, October 6. It is imperative that you do not put in an appearance until sufficient darkness has wrapt the world around about to insure your safe arrival. Detention by the police might embarrass the rest of the bunch. Although the affair is to be informal, it is insisted upon that you at least cover nature's garb with a smile. Bring your hammer along, as there will be plenty of opportunity for knocking; use might also be found for a corkscrew. Also bring that other fellow along and make him a member.

Extra! Added attraction: There will be enough steam in the boiler and coal in the bin to assure a hot time.

NO SCIENCE, BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE

"Find enclosed $5 for the Florists' Manual, by William Scott. It is the best book of the age on commercial floriculture and should be in the home of every gardener."—CONRAD FORBACH, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."—J. A. VALENTINE, Pres. Park Floral Co., Denver, Colo.

No dry-as-dust botanical classifications, but tells you just how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

TELLS you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

Treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 1, 1908.
Dear Sirs: I wish to write you a few lines concerning your No. 2 boiler which we received last fall. Your boiler proved to be excellent in material and workmanship. It did the work very nicely last winter with a small amount of coal. Others used up more than a carload while we used only 15 tons all winter, including what we used in the dwelling. Every one in our neighborhood has got a Kroeschell boiler. As soon as the other greenhouse men saw it they took a liking to it and now they've all got one. We speak well of your boiler to all who see it. The Kroeschell is our favorite if we ever get another.
Yours Respectfully,

JOHN KOENIG, Box 88, Valley Crossing, O.

NOT CAST IRON—Has thin waterways. Heats quickly. It is the most efficient, safest and most economical boiler built. Very powerful. 15 sizes, heating from the smallest greenhouse up to 50,000 square feet of glass to 60 degrees, at 15 degrees below zero. Prices and catalogue on application.

CAPACITY OF EXPANSION TANK.

I have erected two houses this summer, one 26x200 and the other 26x100, with a connecting house 15x40 feet. I have a No. 7 Kroeschell boiler and generator. There are six 2-inch flows in each house, with fourteen 2-inch returns under the benches and along the side walls. It was recommended to me to use an expansion tank with a capacity of 100 gallons, as the bottom of this tank will be not higher than twelve feet from the base of the boiler. A local plumber, who does the piping, says it would be foolish to use a tank of that capacity. I would be thankful for your kindly advice in regard to the matter. A. P.

The point is not how high the bottom of the tank is above the bottom of the boiler, but how high it is above the highest point in the heating plant. If it is twelve feet above the high point in the pipe system it will be satisfactory. It should then be connected with the main return close to the boiler by ¾-inch or 1-inch pipe. If the system is full when cool and there is no water in the expansion tank, 100 gallons ought to serve all right; larger would not hurt.

THE HEAT GENERATOR.

Will you kindly tell me where I can get information in regard to the Honeywell generator for hot water systems mentioned in the REVIEW a short time ago?
W. S. K.

The Honeywell generator is manufactured by the Honeywell Heating Specialty Co., Wabash, Ind. It is a simple device for putting the hot water under pressure and thereby raising its temperature, in accordance with the well-known natural law that the boiling point of water is raised about 3 degrees for every pound of pressure put upon it. It is the same principle employed in vacuum steam systems, only applied in the opposite direction. In the vacuum steam systems the system is sealed against the natural atmospheric pressure and the water boils at a lower temperature; in the hot water system artificial pressure is added to the natural atmospheric pressure and the water does not boil until it has been raised to a higher temperature.

Under natural conditions water boils, making steam, at 212 degrees. If one pound pressure is put upon it by artificial means it boils at 215 degrees; two pounds, 218 degrees, etc.

There are several advantages claimed for the under-pressure system. In the first place, the water in the coils is much warmer; it can be 240 degrees under ten pounds pressure, as against 212 degrees under atmosphere. The hotter the water the smaller the pipes, and the smaller the pipes the less volume of water, the more responsive the system is and the less fuel is required. Many a "sick" system, so-called by heating engineers, has been cured by the simple expedient of putting it under pressure.

ting a hot water system under pressure. It has been done by connecting with the city water mains, but this is inexpedient where the city pressure is too high or variable. Attempts have been made to control the pressure with automatic valves. The Honeywell plan is to employ a column of mercury. The "generator" is attached to the pipe leading to the expansion tank and seals the system as soon as the water begins to heat. The expansion of the water under the influence of the fire in the boiler produces the pressure. As the water expands it presses through the generator, lifting the column of mercury until, at the top of the tube, the quicksilver falls through an outer tube and the water is free to pass on to the expansion tank, thereby limiting the pressure to the determined point.

The heat generator may be used in connection with any boiler designed for low pressure hot water and the makers state that many boiler manufacturers recommend it. It has been applied to a number of greenhouse plants and a special generator for greenhouse use, manufactured under Honeywell patents for the Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, was given a certificate of merit at the recent convention of the Society of American Florists at Niagara Falls.

A NOVEL HEATING SYSTEM.

Quite a radical change, over the old method of installing a steam valve in the supply of each steam coil for greenhouse heating, and often in each pipe or each coil, is being installed in the range of ten houses, each 500 feet long, for the Grand Rapids Greenhouse Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

This steam heating system is to be operated with a pressure in the steam mains of not to exceed one pound, and probably most of the time with eight ounces pressure, although the coils are forty-four in number and with from two to six pipes in a coil, and each coil 250 feet long. There are no steam valves whatever installed in the supplies to any of these coils.

The heat regulation is by means of thermostats, which control the heat to the degrees at which the thermostats are set, the power for such control being in the system itself, with no independent piping. All of the large steam mains, return mains, etc., are under the surface of the ground in a trench, so that no supports are necessary, and the pipes are out of the way. The steam main from the boiler is over 350 feet long, as the boilers are quite a distance from the houses. The size of the mains and connections to the coils are much smaller than with ordinary practice.

The system has been planned on the compound vacuum principle by the Simonds Heating & Specialty Co., Detroit, and is being installed by the employees of the Greenhouse Co. It includes several automatic features outside of the automatic heat regulation.

KEEP THE RECORD.

What happens in the night? It is a question that interests every grower who aims to turn out the best possible stock, for a widely fluctuating night temperature is fatal to the best success with either cut flowers or fine pot plants. The only way the proprietor can be absolutely certain of what takes place in his absence is to use a recording thermometer, such as now is to be found in most of the first-class establishments. With this, the chart shows in the morning exactly what the temperature was at any moment of the night, and the owner may know for certain that his wishes were carried out. Joseph Traudt, of the Yates Floral Co., Canajoharie, N. Y., says it is one of the most satisfactory adjuncts he ever had about the place. The expert night man should welcome such an instrument, for it makes a black-and-white record of his capability—there could be no better testimonial than the charts from one of these recording thermometers, showing uniformity of night temperature. A good man will make the pencil in the machine draw an almost perfectly straight line along the designated degree mark, while a bungler will have a record that looks like the map of a mountain range.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Tea roses and Richmonds are plentiful, but Beauties are scarce and prices have advanced, and this market must depend upon Chicago to help out. At present large quantities of carnations are also shipped in, as the demand is great and there are not enough home-grown carnations to supply the demand.

A few asters can be seen in some of the stores. These are also shipped in, as the dry weather has ruined all of the outdoor stock. Tuberoses are scarce. Smilax, also, is scarce. Tritomas seem to be the principal cut flowers that the stores are using in decorating the windows, and some fine displays are being made with them.

Various Notes.

George Bastian, who has been quite ill, is now improving nicely and we hope soon to see him back in the store.

A. F. Barbe had his fine driving horse stolen a few days ago. After much trouble and expense the horse was found over in Kansas, running at large. The thief evidently had been frightened and had turned the horse loose, but it was badly disfigured by having its beautiful long mane and tail cut off. Mr. Barbe has a good clue as to who the thief was and will bring him to justice.

The show window of the Rock Flower Co.'s shop was artistically decorated Saturday with tritoma, fancy grasses and green chiffon, making a beautiful effect.

The Alpha Floral Co. is now installing a new refrigerator, 7½x20 feet. The GRAND RAPIDS.

The Grand Rapids Greenhouse Co. has made good progress in the work of organizing its business and improving its property. The company was formed last winter by combining several of the large individual plants. Its Madison avenue, East street and Division street plants are devoted almost entirely to the growing of lettuce and other winter crops, while the Burton avenue plant, comprising the old Strong greenhouses, is given up to flowers.

The Burton avenue plant is under the direction of N. B. Stover, and here extensive improvements have been made and others are under way. An office building and show room, with a cold storage basement, has just been completed, fronting on Burton avenue, and a show greenhouse, connecting with the office, has been built.

Four new houses, two for roses and two for violets, will be built before winter sets in. Next season additional houses will be built, until the entire five acres are under glass. The present area is about 75,000 square feet.

THE PULVERIZED MANURE CO.,
Union Stock Yards, Chicago.

Gentlemen: In reply to your inquiry of how we liked your Shredded Cattle Manure, would say that we took one car as a trial, then we gave you an order for two cars more and now we have just bought of you three hundred tons. We gave your manure a good trial test as follows:

We put nine hundred pounds on a bench three hundred feet long by five and one-half feet wide, as a mulch on Beauties, and on the next bench, of exactly the same size, planted also with Beauties, we put two thousand pounds of rough cattle Manure. After three days the rough Manure had become all washed out, nothing being left but straw and dirt, while your Shredded Manure lasted ten to twelve days and is still doing work.

In making manure water it is fully three or four times as strong as the rough Manure. The advantages of its even quality and the easy and unobjectionable way of handling the Manure, not a pound being wasted, make it cheaper in our opinion than the rough Manure which we can get for simply the cost of freight and loading. Respectfully, BASSETT & WASHBURN.

BASSETT & WASHBURN
Growers and Wholesale Dealers in Cut Flowers
76-78 WABASH AVE.

CHICAGO, ILL., October 31, 1907.

THE PULVERIZED MANURE CO.,
Union Stock Yards, Chicago.

Gentlemen: In reply to your inquiry of how we liked your Shredded Cattle Manure, would say that we took one car as a trial, then we gave you an order for two cars more and now we have just bought of you three hundred tons. We gave your manure a good trial test as follows:

We put nine hundred pounds on a bench three hundred feet long by five and one-half feet wide, as a mulch on Beauties, and on the next bench, of exactly the same size, planted also with Beauties.
we put two thousand pounds of rough cattle Manure. After three days the rough Manure had become all washed out, nothing being left but straw and dirt, while your Shredded Manure lasted ten to twelve days and is still doing work.

In making manure water it is fully three or four times as strong as the rough Manure. The advantages of its even quality and the easy and unobjectionable way of handling the Manure, not a pound being wasted, make it cheaper in our opinion than the rough Manure which we can get for simply the cost of freight and loading. Respectfully, BASSETT & WASHBURN.

State of Trade.

Business last week was a little slow in some respects. Roses, which were plentiful at the beginning of the week, are gradually becoming scarcer, but we have the assurance of a good crop in a week or two. Brides and Maids are scarce and somewhat poor in quality, while other varieties, such as Beauties, Kaisersins, Rhea Reid, etc., are looking fine.

Carnations are coming better right along. The flowers are fine, but it is difficult to get the stems as long as our customers would like them. Enchantress, Lawson and red still predominate, but white are scarce, and naturally there is a big demand for this color.

Asters are a thing of the past for 1908. In fact, all outdoor stock is over with, as our first frost of the season visited this section of the state on the night of October 1. Longiflorums, as usual, sell well, and are just the thing for the fall weddings. Callas are commencing to put in their appearance again, but as yet the supply is limited. The chrysanthemum crops look most promising. The weather during the week was cool.

Various Notes.

Everybody is busy making geranium cuttings now.

Mr. Bradford, of the Springfield Floral Co., of Springfield, O., was a visitor last week.

Clifford Pruner, from E. H. Hunt's, of Chicago, is making his rounds among the Dayton florists this week.

The Dayton Florists' Club held its monthly meeting at J. F. Young's store, on East Fifth street, October 5.

The Market.

Business during the last week has been good. The different store openings used a large quantity of plants and flowers and kept all the store men hustling. Frost has cut off all outdoor stuff. A few early mums are to be seen in the store windows and serve as a reminder that the queen of autumn will soon hold full sway.

Various Notes.

Fred W. Gust, formerly with W. K. Partridge, of Cincinnati, and recently with Mrs. E. A. Williams, of Pittsburg, has taken a position with A. Wiegand & Sons.

Frank Benson, of Newport, Ky., has opened a store on Massachusetts avenue. He has located in a good place and should make a success of his venture.

DENVER.

State of Business.

The last two weeks have been quiet in the retail flower business, but with the coming cooler weather it is hoped that there will be a steady improvement in market conditions.

Roses are fairly good, considering the warm weather we have been having. Up to September 25 the weather was unusually warm for that month, but at that date a frost and a little snow about put an end to outdoor flowers.

Carnations are increasing in size of flower and length of stem. Asters are about over with and such as are left are of inferior quality. A few violets have made their appearance, but are soft and short of stem. They seem, however, to supply a demand which comes from those customers who like to call for stock out of season.

Various Notes.

The interest of the public in flowers has been kept up by the horticultural exhibitions which have been going on both at the Interstate Fair and Exposition, held in Denver, and at the State Fair, held at Pueblo. The exhibits were good and arranged with the greatest skill, and they were all of excellent quality. The principal prize winners at the Denver show were the Park Floral Co., the Colorado Springs Floral Co., Daniels & Fisher, Alpha Floral Co., Goeschel & Wood and H. J. Berry.

J. A. Valentine and party have returned from a wagon trip through the Rocky Mountains.

Mrs. Scott, of the Scott Floral Co., has returned from Buffalo.

The Elitch-Long Greenhouses are about to open a wholesale department on Champa street.

G. H. Cooper has returned from a vacation trip to Philadelphia.

C. F. Maler is the first on deck with violets. E. S. K.

NEWPORT, R. I.

Mrs. Robert Goelet has been so favorably impressed by the manner in which the affairs of the Newport Horticultural Society have been conducted, that she has contributed $500 to the society, this sum to be used, at the rate of $100 a year, for prizes to private gardeners.

Perhaps the success of Mrs. Goelet's gardener, Colin Robertson, as an exhibitor, may have had a little to do with the prompting of Mrs. Goelet to make so large a contribution. One thing, however, is certain, that it augurs well for the future of the Newport Horticultural Society, that the interest of such as Mrs. Goelet is aroused in its affairs. M.

Plenty of Light for the Plants

Have you ever been inside of one of our cypress houses on a dull day, and the same day in an iron frame greenhouse? Did you notice any great difference in the amount of light? Did the stock in one house seem to be doing any better than in the other on account of the light?

Don't be deceived—you can make more money on an investment of $5000.00 in our cypress greenhouses than you can on any other style or type of house made in this country. You get more bench room, more plants, more money and more profits on the same investment, with our cypress houses, by two-fifths over the iron frame house. And as far as quality goes, just pick out the prize winning stock at any show and inquire as to kind of greenhouse it was grown in.

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

SHEAF OF WHEAT AND ROSES.

The funeral designs by C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia, often show unusual treatment. The accompanying illustration gives an entirely different method of arranging a sheaf of wheat with flowers from those shown earlier in this series. In this instance Mr. Fox attaches importance to each rose being a perfect specimen, quality rather than quantity being sought in the arrangement. The flowers in the illustration are Brides, the stems tied with a bow of watered silk ribbon.

PHIL.

LOCAL ADVERTISING.

H. L. Neal, of Seguin, Tex., sends a local newspaper to show how he advertises his Roselawn Greenhouses by means of timely lines scattered among the local news items and says that with a change every week they pay him well. He adds: "The articles on designs that have appeared in the REVIEW have been worth a great deal to me; the illustrations I cut out and paste in an album to show to my customers and find them a great help in taking orders. The REVIEW gets better all the time and is the best friend a retail florist can have. Big cotton and corn crops here and good times ahead for the Texas florists."

DEADLY COMBINATION.

The display window of a shop in New York, whose owner is undoubtedly a good man and free from guile—that being the prevalent type of Bronx residents—bears a handsome sign, in gilt letters:

.....
: FLORIST :
: FUNERAL DIRECTOR :
.....

And underneath this is a large picture of President Roosevelt with a gun to his shoulder, taking deadly aim.

No explanation is offered, nor are the political proclivities of the florist and funeral director known.

HALLOWE'EN WINDOW DISPLAY.

I wish to offer a suggestion in reply to the query from A. F., in the REVIEW of October 8, with reference to window decorations for Hallowe'en.

The week previous to Hallowe'en last year I had in our window an appropriate decoration or trim that attracted much attention and at the same time was an inexpensive one to execute.

Our window is quite a wide one, but only about four feet deep. My trim was just an ordinary farmyard scene. In the first place, I covered the tile flooring with about three inches of gravel from the bench in the greenhouse. Then I secured from an old tree a few branches, with which was made a rustie fence such as was used a great deal in olden times—merely a few upright stakes, tied so as to form a Y at the top, and then some pieces laid lengthwise. Then I had three small stacks of corn in the window, each with a few old ears of the corn showing. Just in the rear of the fence, as a setting, were placed the tops of a few small trees, with some of the autumn foliage still on the branches. I also had two such trees in the foreground. The next thing was to get a few crows, for without these the whole would have been incomplete. This was easy. We bought a half dozen birds, made of cloth, at the color, and then in black painted the wording, "Go to Schroeter's for Decorations." As a finishing touch, I scattered a few small sized pumpkins about the ground.

One thing I must not forget was a moon peeping out from between the trees. This is easily made. Cut out a piece of glass of suitable diameter, paint it pale yellow and then paint a face upon it. Ours was a funny face. In behind the glass I hung an electric lamp, for use in the evenings. See that every part is in about the right proportion.

Now, while there is nothing startling about such a window trim, it is inexpensive to make, certainly very appropriate, and, if nicely executed, attracts favorable attention.

HUGO SCHROETER.

A HALLOWE'EN IDEA.

Florists' windows usually express the beautiful and sublime. Let the Hallowe'en season afford a diversion. Here's ten cent store, dyed them jet black and then painted the bills red, and they made fine crows.

To add to the advertising feature of the window, I made of thin boards what was meant to represent a billboard. I painted the whole a sort of a pumpkin a suggestion for a comical corner in your display. Secure a lot of yellow gourds and convert them into miniature pumpkin-heads. Mount each on a slender green stake and thrust the stakes into the fern pots at such a height as to give the impression that the fern had blossomed out this comical little pumpkin-head. A pointed knife is quite necessary to carve out the eyes, nose and mouth, and you can give them amusingly different expressions by varying the features, some with slanting eyes, some with yawning mouth, etc. If you have the small electric bulbs, illuminate the heads; if not, various colored beads will serve for eyes and finish them off with gay colored caps of different shapes, easily made from crepe paper.

I worked out this idea in my own window last year and it was pleasing to see the merriment it made for the passers-by. Not only did it attract attention, but I sold all the extra heads I could make.

THE MUM AND THE WEDDING.

Autumn Brings Nuptials.

It is not alone to the vernal season that the retail florist looks for good wedding orders, for, while marriages are more numerous in June, it has been found that many of the largest hymeneal affairs occur in the autumnal months of the chrysanthemum, when the boldest decorative effects are fortunately possible with the use of foliage and flowers. The well equipped decorator knows the necessity of being prepared at this season, but those not well equipped need not be concerned lest they be overtaxed, for the public has a marvelously acute perception in such matters, and rare it is indeed that the fond parents of a blushing bride call upon other than the decorator who possesses skill and other resources in exact proportion to the work required. If you want the best work, prepare yourself with the best of facilities. Don't expect to make your preparations after you book your order—keep your facilities always at least a step ahead of the requirements of the best job you ever had.

Skill and Other Requisites.

In these days one needs something more than skill to be a decorator, but accessories are so numerous that it is not necessary or, indeed, possible for any retailer to possess more than a few of the many changes of stage setting; for instance, as in the accompanying illustrations, not more than once in a lifetime would the average decorator be called upon to provide so many tall, tin-lined birch bark vases as were used in this decoration—and the number of styles of such large vases is considerable, although none could have been chosen more in harmony with the scheme selected—birch bark and autumn's queen, the chrysanthemum.

It is in the harmony of detail that the work of the capable decorator shows for what it is. Suppose, for instance, that in the decoration pictured the white wicker Beauty vases had been used for the mums: Would the effect have been so good? And what about the railing which surrounds the platform on which the bridal party is to stand? Would any other treatment have so well accorded with the stately lines of tall birch bark vases of mums down the central aisle? Note that the rough bark of the saplings used to make this rail is not covered with the drapery of asparagus—its mere outline only was softened. Even the base of the kneeling stool was of birch bark.

The Church Decoration.

Of course, this is a big church wedding and a much larger job than the ordinary. Indeed, the leading stores do not get more than one or two such jobs as this a year and outside the larger cities such orders are rare, but ideas are just as necessary to proper treatment where the space and quantities of stock used are smaller. No matter how large your palms, you must get them up on plant stands to give the effect of greater height to the decoration. The larger the rooms the higher you must go. Note that the support for the canopy over the kneeling stool is far back among the palms and entirely out of sight.

The platform for the ceremony was specially built for the purpose and on two levels, so that the central figures might be above the rest of the bridal party, while all were above the floor level. Many a good decoration has been spoiled by the fact that none except those in the front of the body of guests could see the point of greatest interest. It was a big little thing in this case to raise the whole decoration and to put the encircling rail and vases on the first platform level and not on the floor itself; it was where people could see it without craning their necks.

It is too often the case that where a decoration is to be put up in a large room, like a hall or a church, the size of the room dwarfs the florist's work and a disappointing effect of inadequacy is the result. For decorations in large rooms there is no better flower than the chrysanthemum, if, indeed, there is any other so good. The weeks of the mid-season mums is the time when the florist may undertake his largest work with the feeling that for the time being at least he has at his hand a flower whose bold decorative qualities will respond to strong, free treatment.

CARE OF HOUSE PLANTS.

Of all the questions asked by the purchasing public, the one most frequently hurled at the unprotected plant seller is,

Decoration for a Large Autumnal Wedding.

White Chrysanthemums and Birch Bark in a Church Decoration.

"How often should I water this plant?" or, "How many times a day does it need water?" or, "Should I set it in a dish filled with water?"

This query is not more sensible than a question asking a doctor, "When should a person sleep?" or, "When should he eat?" If the reference in either case were to a plant that needed particular treatment or a person whose health was not up to the mark, it would be justifiable, but when it is attached to everything sold it ceases to have any meaning.

If the purchasers used judgment in watering, they would know that practically all plants sold for indoor decorating are well established, and, if the conditions are at all favorable, they should be watered whenever they need it. This is the proper answer to give to all such queries, and whether the soil dries out once a day or once a week makes no difference if the plant is not allowed to get too dry.

The situation in which the plant is kept has the greatest influence on the moisture required. Draughty rooms, proximity to glass windows or doors, absence of light, quantity of gas burned, heat radiation from steam or other methods of heating, glazed plant-jars and many other conditions have much more effect on the health of the plant than the simple watering. Yet it is rare that anyone asks about any of these things and it is only when the disgruntled customer drags the poor, suffering plant back to whence it came, or comes in to scold the plantsman for selling a palm that was "sick" when delivered, that a few of these salient points are brought out. The customer usually prefaces the remarks by saying, "I took care of the plant just the way you told me to. I watered it once a day and it kept getting worse and worse all the time, until I have brought it back for you to see it. I guess it was sick when you sold it to me."

When the poor florist timidly inquires about the conditions in the lady's home, he always brings forth the information that the plant had been put into a fancy jardiniere, kept in a room in which gas had been burned every night and in a dark corner or a draughty hallway, and he is really surprised that the misused specimen kept as long as it did.

The public should be made to understand, if possible, that plants are anxious to live as long as they can, and, if given just a fighting chance, will do their best to keep themselves as pretty as their surroundings. But, when the effort is too much, the plants will sadly droop their leaves, in a feeble protest against too great odds to be overcome, and, strange to relate, it is always the fault of the florist for having sold a "sick" plant.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.—E. O. Lovell has ordered material for the construction of an extension to his greenhouse.

FERTILIZER FOR PLUMOSUS.

Will you please let me know which is the best fertilizer or manure for Asparagus plumosus, on land not very well supplied with humus? The land is principally made up of a sandy soil and is quite heavy. The asparagus is grown under a slatted shed.

What causes A. plumosus to have a blighted appearance? What causes the fronds to turn brown or yellow? What treatment would you recommend?

S. H.

The best fertilizer for Asparagus plumosus is good, well rotted stable manure, and this may be used liberally in preparing the bed for this crop. The soil may also be improved by plowing in a crop of cowpeas or clover in the autumn previous to planting the asparagus, this being one of the best ways to supply humus and also nitrogen to the soil.

Without seeing the plants and the conditions under which they have been grown, it is difficult to give an opinion regarding the blighted appearance, but it is quite possible that it is caused by getting dry at the root.

Geraniums

BEDDING GERANIUMS.

I was glad to see the several letters in recent issues of the REVIEW on the subject of geranium propagation. It seems to be a generally accepted fact that more cuttings damp off from outdoor than indoor stock and I am satisfied that early propagation only aggravates the evil with the outside cuttings. There is no trouble in rooting the show pelargoniums, even in warm weather. The cuttings are, of course, from plants pot-grown and naturally harder, but even in summer propagation of zonals is attended usually by a heavy loss. The cooler the months, the better are the chances of success. One year I tried leaving the boxes of cuttings outdoors and the results were the reverse of satisfactory. Shading I have found of no advantage, either in fall or spring, but if the sand or soil is kept moist, as in the case of mums, carnations or coleus, the bulk of the cuttings may be expected to rot.

Cuttings put in a fortnight ago have received no waterings since their first one, but a spraying overhead has been given in the middle of warm days. The sand is dry, but not dust-dry, and the cuttings remain plump. No further waterings will be given until the sand is very dry and only enough to keep the cuttings from shriveling. Constant watering promotes decay and a too rapid growth on the cuttings which may have rooted. This is not what we want. The opinions of others on this subject, which is timely and important, would be interesting.

YOUNG STOCK FOR SPRING.

I intend to buy geraniums from 2½-inch pots to grow for spring sales. When should I order them? L. A. M. K.

If you get your geraniums about the last of February from 2½-inch pots, they will be sufficiently early. Place the order some time ahead to ensure prompt delivery.

IN THE SOUTH.

Speaking once more about the rooting of geraniums, I should say that J. S. Pollard's directions, in the REVIEW of October 8, are certainly good. As applied to the latitude in which he lives, his method would probably be free from fault. And yet there is one defect in his instructions; he neglects to state that his rules are intended for an Iowa climate, for they would not be of much value down here or in any other state a few hundred miles away.

The idea of rooting geraniums under glass, as some advocate, in such a temperature as we have here today, October 10—85 degrees outside—is out of the question. This is, however, en passant, because it is the fault, also, of many other writers in giving directions for the care or propagation of plants or sowing of seeds, without allowing for the latitude where they have to be grown.

As a matter of fact, geraniums do not take to any kind of forcing. Too much heat overhead, too much water in hot weather, or any bottom heat will bring bad results. Study your climate. Make them as late as possible without any protection and you will be successful with a large percentage.

Down here in the south our worst difficulty is to keep our stock during the summer. The red varieties of the Bruant type stand well, but the soft colored, light shades generally dry up.

Another drawback is the shortness of our season. As I previously stated, geraniums cannot be propagated here much sooner than the first part of November, and by March 1 or a little sooner they must be offered in the market. If we pinch them, they are put back too late, so we have to be satisfied with a single stem, which is not by any means a perfect plant, and this is the only reason why we have sometimes to get fresh stock from the north.

BONE FLOUR AS FERTILIZER.

If bone flour is good in a mulch for roses and chrysanthemums, why could it not be used as a liquid in connection with the animal liquids that we use?

S. M.

Bone flour is a useful and quick acting fertilizer on roses, carnations, chrysanthemums and other bench crops, but great care must be taken in applying it, or more harm than good will result. I have seen it used on some occasions as a liquid stimulant. My own experience has not, however, been favorable and I much prefer it in the dry form. Liquid from animal manure alternated with chemical topdressings gives satisfactory results. Too much of the liquid causes soft, flabby growth. The chemicals make the wood harder, although some of the more powerful ones, like nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia, promote soft growth and heavy foliage.

ORCHIDS

FLORISTS' BEST CATTLEYAS.

Here are some of the best cattleyas for florists to grow for cutting, as stated by George E. McClure in a recent address before the Buffalo Florists' Club:

The first cattleya of the year to bloom is C. Trianae, and its varieties. It is a native of Colombia and is preëminently the best in the genus. It has many distinct varieties, which range from pure white to rose purple. C. Trianae begins to bloom in early January and lasts until March. C. Schrøderae, which resembles C. Trianae in size of bloom and habit of growth, is sometimes referred to as a variety of C. Trianae. It is lighter in color than Trianae and blooms a little later. It is also a native of Colombia and is invaluable, as it is the only cattleya obtainable in quantity to succeed Trianae in time of flowering. It blooms from March to April.

The next cattleya of importance in the order of flowering is C. Mossiae, a Venezuelan species, which is in its prime from April to May. It is a prolific bloomer and for this reason it does not last long in cultivation, but with ordinary treatment it will last long enough to amply repay all care and expenditure.

C. Mendellii blooms from the end of April to early June and is an excellent orchid, though seldom offered in quantity.

During the months of June and July a number of fine cattleyas bloom. One of the best of these is Warscewiczii, and its variety, Sanderiana, commonly called gigas. It is a native of Venezuela, and produces more flowers to the spike than any other of the large-lipped cattleyas. The flowers are large and beautifully marked. It is easily recognized by the two yellow eyes or blotches at the base of the labellum. This species should have a decided period of rest in order to produce flowers in quantity. Other fine sorts that bloom in June and July are Hardyana, Dowiana and Schilleriana.

One of the cattleyas of the first rank blooms during August and September: Gaskelliana. Its petals are narrower than most of the large-flowered cattleyas, but its lip is large and beautiful. It might be called the best summer-flowering cattleya.

During October and November two of the finest cattleyas make their appearance, labiata and Bowringiana. Labiata, one of the best of the cattleyas, begins to bloom in October and continues during November. It is of easy culture and can be obtained in large quantities at low prices. It is a native of Brazil, and is sometimes sold under the name of C. labiata vera to distinguish it from others of the labiata class of which it is the type.

Many other fine cattleyas might be mentioned as among the best, but a collection of the above mentioned would give a comprehensive idea of the whole genus and abundance of satisfaction.

NOTES ON THE

BEST LILACS

Their Value to Retail Florists.

There can be no question but that the lilacs are the most widely popular deciduous shrubs grown in America today. Their ease of culture, fragrance, free flowering qualities, hardiness and comparative freedom from insect attacks are all strong points in their favor. The foliage appears early and hangs on very late, in nearly all varieties retaining its dark green color until it falls. Whether as individual specimens or in masses, lilacs are effective. Care, however, should be taken not to mix varieties like vulgaris, Chinensis and Persica, as the habits vary so greatly and the blooming period is not the same.

As forcing subjects lilacs have never attained the wide popularity here that they hold in Europe, but a good number are grown in winter near the big cities. I do not intend in these notes to speak on this branch of lilac culture, but rather to advocate their being more taken in hand by the general run of retail florists for outdoor uses. Anyone who has seen the annual displays of these flowers at such places as the Arnold Arboretum, Boston, or Highland park, Rochester, and noted the crowds of enthusiastic admirers, must admit that they hold premier position among outdoor flowering shrubs, and must at the same time feel that here is a chance for wide-awake florists to secure some of the best sorts, grow, flower and sell them to their customers. That they will sell admits of no question. Ask any prominent nurseryman if he ever has any trouble in disposing of all his good lilacs. Your customers cannot all go to the nurseries to see them in bloom, but if florists have some bushy little plants, each carrying even one good inflorescence, there will be no trouble in disposing of them at profitable prices.

Time to Plant.

Fall, in my estimation, is a much better time to plant lilacs than in spring, and unless the ground will freeze solid very soon after planting, it is best to do this work from October 20 to November 10 rather than wait for the spring, when so many duties crowd. There is far less probability of the roots becoming dried out in fall than in spring, and I have rarely lost a plant at the former season. The nurseries are overwhelmed with spring orders, but now they can attend to customers promptly and there is less likelihood of varieties specially wanted being sold out.

Lilacs appreciate a rich soil, and do best in a moderately moist one, where, however, water will not stand in winter. They will grow fairly well in quite poor soil, but to see them at their best, land well manured and deeply plowed or spaded is required. Grafted plants are mostly sold. These are preferable for forcing, but own-root stock is preferable for outdoor planting. The grafted plants sucker considerably, and if perchance a borer gets his work in on the main stem, the whole plant is lost. Syringa vulgaris and privet are a good deal used for stocks. My experience of the latter is not favorable. Grafting is done in spring and budding in July and August. The best way to propagate the rarer sorts is by half ripened green wood in a hotbed in June. Propagation by layers and hardwood cuttings is also carried out to some extent.

After lilacs have flowered, all the inflorescences should be removed; otherwise these go to seed and considerably feared, as the plants are usually in a dying condition before the pest is noted. Burning affected plants is the most wholesome remedy.

Single Varieties.

The named varieties of lilacs are now numerous, many of the finest being introduced by Lemoine, of Nancy, France. From the time the first flowers open on Syringa oblata until the tree lilacs, S. Pekinensis and S. Japonica, have faded, there is a six weeks' season of bloom. A condensed list of some of the most desirable sorts in singles is as follows: Marie Legraye, still unsurpassed among whites; Frau Bertha Dammann and Mme. Moser, also good whites; in dark purples Philemon takes the lead and is one of the finest lilacs in cultivation; the old Souvenir de Ludwig Späth is also good; Rubra de Marley or Madlyensis is a free blooming purple red variety; cærulea superba is a beautiful clear blue when fully open; the well known Charles X, with its big clusters of dark red flowers; Gloire des Moulins and Ambroise Verschaffelt are excellent light weaken the plants. At this time, also, any necessary pruning can be done. Spring and fall are unsuitable seasons for this work.

Lilacs are singularly free from insect attacks. The borer already referred to is sometimes troublesome, usually on old plants. Oyster shell scale can be destroyed by washing the wood with a strong solution of whale oil soap to which has been added a little kerosene. San Jose scale is the enemy most to be pink sorts; Macrostachya is also a glorious light pink variety, making a splendid plant.

Double Varieties.

While as a rule the singles are preferable to the doubles, the latter persist in flower much later than the former and they include some beautiful sorts. A few of the choicest are: Mme. Lemoine, superb white, probably the finest double in cultivation; President Carnot, pale

BEDDING GERANIUMS.

I was glad to see the several letters in recent issues of the REVIEW on the subject of geranium propagation. It seems to be a generally accepted fact that more cuttings damp off from outdoor than indoor stock and I am satisfied that early propagation only aggravates the evil with the outside cuttings. There is no trouble in rooting the show pelargoniums, even in warm weather. The cuttings are, of course, from plants pot-grown and naturally harder, but even in summer propagation of zonals is attended usually by a heavy loss. The cooler the months, the better are the chances of success. One year I tried leaving the boxes of cuttings outdoors and the results were the reverse of satisfactory. Shading I have found of no advantage, either in fall or spring, but if the sand or soil is kept moist, as in the case of mums, carnations or coleus, the bulk of the cuttings may be expected to rot.

Miscellaneous Varieties.

The foregoing are all forms of Syringa vulgaris. There are many other interesting, beautiful and useful forms. Some of the more desirable are: S. oblata, purplish violet, the earliest of all lilacs to bloom, the foliage becoming a beautiful red in autumn; S. Josikæa, violet, strong grower, blooms very late; S. Chinensis, Chinese lilac, several colors, makes a wide arching bush; S. Persica, Persian lilac, purple or white, slender drooping branches; S. villosa, pink, a very late bloomer; S. pubescens, small, very fragrant, pale blue flowers, a beautiful variety; S. hyacinthiflora, very early, a cross between S. oblata and S. vulgaris; S. Japonica, Japanese tree lilac, attains a height of twenty-five to thirty-five feet, flowers early in July, immense white panicles, makes a superb lawn specimen; S. Pekinensis, grows fifteen to twenty-five feet high, flowers yellowish white, blooms the end of June or early in July.

The Newer Sorts.

The foregoing lists do not contain any of the newer and high-priced lilacs. Any or all are worthy of culture and there is room for a big business in these improved varieties over the old S. vulgaris and its white form. The old sorts are worth growing, but anyone who has made the comparison must admit that the named sorts are much superior. The named varieties of S. vulgaris appeal most to people, but the early and late blooming qualities of the other species are strong points in their favor.

The Best Dozen.

For anyone wanting a "boiled-down" list, I submit the following dozen sorts, which will bloom over a period of six weeks: S. oblata, S. vulgaris; singles, Marie Legraye, Philemon, Ludwig Späth, Gloire des Moulins, Macrostachya, Charles X, S. vulgaris; doubles, Mme.

Lemoine, Alphonse Lavalley, Belle de Nancy, S. Chinensis, S. villosa and S. Japonica.

The immense development of late years in the landscape branch of horticulture makes this an important department with many retail florists. Of all the popular shrubs called for, none possess the combined good qualities of the lilacs, and he who takes time by the forelock and works up a good stock of them will assuredly make money. A few good varieties planted in a florist's own front garden will also prove a first-class advertisement. W. N. CRAIG.

HARDY CLIMBERS.

[A paper by Antoine Wintzer, of West Grove, Pa., read before the New York Florists' Club October 12, 1908.]

Hardy Clematises.

As all plantsmen know, the hardy clematis family forms a group of most desirable hardy climbers. They are suitable to plant in almost any place where the fancy of the gardener or grower desires to have them, so I will not enlarge on that topic, as full details can be found in Bailey's Encyclopedia, also in the leading catalogues of Europe and America.

Glancing, mentally, over the field it has often occurred to me that the clematis family would prove a fascinating pastime for the plant breeder of ample means and leisure, and we sincerely hope that some of our noted breeders may soon be inspired to take up the work, if it has not been taken in hand.

Probably it is not generally known that over forty years ago several thousand fine young clematis seedlings of the lanuginosa and azurea grandiflora strain were raised by the enterprising and talented plantsman, the late Eugene Beauma, at Morrisiana, N. Y., in 1864. Nearly all of the seedlings produced fine large flowers, some of them fully as good as the named varieties we have at the present time. The seed was sown as soon as matured, in shallow wooden boxes. The young seedlings were then planted in the field the following spring, and left out over winter. The next year they bloomed freely.

One strong point in favor of those seedlings was, nearly all produced large flowers, adhering pretty closely to the type, and they were of unusually healthy and vigorous growth. It is my firm belief had the good work been continued a remarkable strain could have been produced.

While we seem to have done little toward improving the family, the European breeders are doing grand work along that line. In glancing over their catalogues one can find from fifty to seventy-five or more varieties and types listed. Nearly all our leading firms are satisfied with from five to ten varieties. They have, evidently, learned from experience that few of the large flowering varieties are adapted to our climate.

If this is the case, we should strive our utmost to breed as good or better varieties suitable for our climate. Perhaps some one is doing the good work in silence.

The following are some of the large flowering varieties, mostly of lanuginosa, Jackmani and viticella types, generally catalogued by the leading firms:

Jackmani, violet purple.
Henry, creamy white.
Gypsy Queen, dark velvety purple.
Ramona, deep blue, very fine.
Mme. Baron Vleillard, shade of lavender pink.
Ville de Lyon, carmine red.
Star of India, shade of purple.
Miss Bateman, silvery white.
Lanuginosa candida, pure white.
Belle of Woking, silvery gray.
Countess of Lovelace, bluish lilac double.
Jackmani superba, deep violet purple.

That beautiful and popular Japanese variety, Clematis paniculata, has grown to be a general favorite. Its graceful sprays of fleecy white flowers are always attractive. It is one of the most reliable and easily grown of the family. It is readily increased by seedlings. The seed is usually sown as soon as matured in a greenhouse, and the young plants potted singly, and planted in the field in May or June. Other methods are sometimes pursued.

The native Clematis Virginiana is found growing wild, usually in moist places, near the banks of rivers and brooks by the margin of woodlands, also in neglected fence corners. Its sprays of white flowers form a pleasing sight in early autumn. It is easily increased from seed.

The European variety, Clematis Flammula, was more extensively grown formerly than at the present time. It flowers in small white clusters. Its roots are used as stock to graft the large flowered varieties on.

Clematis Davidiana, a late flowering variety, producing small, tubular blue flowers in August and September. Grown from seed.

Clematis stans, like the preceding, only the flowers are a light porcelain blue, and borne in September and October. When the season is long enough to ripen the seed it is best grown that way. It is the easiest variety to grow from hard wood cuttings. These should be cut to single eyes and planted in the greenhouse bench in January or February. In March or April they will be well rooted, and should then be potted into 3-inch pots, and are then ready to plant in the field in May or June. They will bloom the same season, in October.

Outside of New York state I do not think that the large-flowering varieties of clematis are grown to any consider-

THE NATIVE AMERICAN LOTUS.

I am sending to you some water lilies, of which I should like to know the botanical name. I am also anxious to know how widely the variety is distributed in this country. These flowers came to me through a customer in the northern part of Illinois, who says there are only three beds of the variety known to exist in the United States. I should like especially to confirm or disprove this point.

The plant received is our native lotus or water chinkapin, Nelumbium luteum, Willd. To give an idea of its distribution, I will quote from the manuals in general use. About forty years ago Chapman's "Flora of the Southern United States" gave its range thus: "Nelumbium luteum, Willd. (Water chinkapin.) Lakes and still waters. Florida, near Tallahassee and northward and westward. Not common."

The earlier editions of Gray's "Manual of the Northern United States" give the distribution of the yellow nelumbo or water chinkapin: "Waters of the western and southern states; rare in the middle states; introduced into the Delaware below Philadelphia, Big Sodus Bay, Lake Ontario and in the Connecticut, near Lyme; perhaps introduced by the aborigines."

The Chicago Academy of Sciences, in its "Flora of Cook County," 1891, gave: "Nelumbo lutea, Pers. Foot of Lake Calumet and Calumet river, Wolf lake."

It is quite likely, however, that the plant has been exterminated from those latter localities. It is reported plentiful in Grass Lake, northwest from Chicago, and I have heard of a considerable tract of the plant in the river near Beardstown, Ill.

Don, in "History of Dichlamydeous Plants," says of Nelumbium luteum: "Native of North America, in lakes and ponds in Virginia, Carolina, Florida and Louisiana; also near Philadelphia, in the ditches and ponds of Brobston's meadows. The seeds are very agreeable to eat and are eagerly sought after by children and Indians. By the latter it is supposed the plant was introduced to those ponds near Philadelphia, as there is no other instance known where it is found so far north."

A special effort should be made to establish this beautiful flower wherever it can be grown. Its conspicuous beauty of bloom and the edible nature of its seeds give it double chance of being speedily exterminated unless steps are taken to preserve it. JOHN HIGGINS.

NORFOLK, VA.—J. W. Grandy, Jr., has opened a retail flower store at 251 Granby street. Mr. Grandy has been for some time with W. A. Hammond, at Richmond.

PLYMOUTH, MASS.—It is reported that Chas. T. Stevens has purchased the flower business of Frank H. Lanman, and that Mr. Lanman will henceforth devote his attention to growing greenhouse vegetables and garden truck for the market.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Poinsettias.

Late propagated cuttings of poinsettias, which have become established in small pots, will still make up into nice little pans for Christmas. Mix a few small nephrolepis or other ferns with them. Of course, these late poinsettias will not give large bracts, but they produce nice, compact stock, generally with foliage to the bottom, and these sell better than the leggy specimens too often seen.

Now is the critical season with poinsettias. Sudden drops in temperature and an oversupply of water at the roots are chief causes of yellow foliage. A night temperature as near 60 degrees as possible should be maintained. As the bracts open, a rise of 5 degrees is desirable, lowering it again when the bracts are fully expanded. Of course, good poinsettias can be and are grown in lower temperature, but plants given the treatment suggested can hardly fail to give satisfaction if carefully tended.

Unless plants have a starved appearance, it is better to avoid use of liquid stimulants until the bracts form. If they take on a pale color, try weak nitrate of soda or soot water to tone them up.

Euphorbia Jacquiniaeflora.

Euphorbia jacquiniaeflora is not nearly so much grown as its merits warrant. Those who handle it commercially have no trouble in disposing of what they produce, either in pots or in the form of cut sprays. It is an old plant, but many people hardly know it, and it is looked upon as a novelty in some markets. Treated similarly to poinsettias, it will come in bloom for Christmas. The rather slender shoots will require staking, but not too stiffly. The best way to get first-class sprays is to plant out a few in a bench, or, if you have a piece of roof adapted for climbers and can train them up it, you will be surprised at the splendid sprays of flowers they will produce.

Berried Plants.

Ardisia crenulata is always a prime favorite at Christmas. The berries hang on the plants so long that they almost seem like everlasting. It is necessary to get a good price for ardisias. They cannot be grown into salable plants in less than three or four years, and therefore cannot be imported very cheaply, and unless the berries are well colored by the holidays, they will not take well. To ensure their having that brilliant red which is so desirable in Christmas plants, let the stock have a sunny house and elevate the best specimens on inverted pots to give them all possible light. As the pots are probably crowded with roots, use liquid manure once in ten days to keep them a good color.

Berried solanums and Christmas peppers ripen so quickly that a cool house only is needed to have them well ripened. These plants are easily and cheaply grown, and can be sold profitably at a moderate price. When they are ripe in good season, a little sale will probably be found for them at Thanksgiving. Both require an abundant water supply and green aphids must not be allowed to disfigure them.

Camellias.

Imported camellias have recently come to hand and are nicely budded. Europe reports a revival of interest in these one-time chief American favorites, and a little better call than usual may be made for them the coming season. Bushy little plants in 6-inch or 8-inch pots are the best sellers. After potting, keep in a cold pit or cool greenhouse. Camellias resent any forcing. This always causes a dropping of the buds. The only time when a fairly brisk heat is advantageous is during the early part of the growing season. These remarks, of course, apply to the cold northern states; in the south, as we know, camellias are familiar outdoor shrubs.

Azaleas.

Sales of azaleas at Christmas are quite considerable each year. The most easily forced variety is the brilliant Hexe, or Firefly, as it is often called, with rosy crimson flowers. Charles Enke, a beautiful pink of similar dwarf habit, is also desirable. Of the larger flowering varieties, Apollo, with its brilliant orange-scarlet flowers, always takes the lead. Vervæncana, Simon Mardner and Deutsche Perle can also be had in bloom for Christmas. Do not subject the plants to too much heat at once, as this may cause many leaves to drop. A temperature of 55 to 60 degrees at night, with a free spraying overhead two or three times a day, will bring them along nicely. Later in the season more heat can be given if it is seen that they are a little backward.

Freesias.

It is time to make the final plantings of freesias. No advantage is gained by keeping the bulbs any longer, as they will only produce weak plants.

The earliest batch should now be on a shelf in a light, sunny house, or if a shelf is not at command, a light bench; 52 to 55 degrees at night is as high as the temperature should be. The pans and flats require a lot of water; in fact, if they are well drained, there is more danger of too little than too much water. A dose of weak liquid manure once a week, now that the flats are full of active roots, will stimulate the plants. Use care in fumigating where freesias are. The foliage is easily scorched and, no matter how fine the flowers may be, they will bring poor prices unless the leaves are green to the tips.

Cyclamens.

Already a few flowers are opening on some of the cyclamens wanted for Christmas sale. For early flowering the plants should now be in a light house, slightly shaded. Space them so that the leaves do not crowd each other, and water with great care. The bulbs are now bristling with buds and all efforts should be used to get a fair proportion of these open for Christmas. A resort to forcing will only result in drawn and attenuated looking plants. A carnation temperature is as high as cyclamens should have at any time. As the plants will not yet have their blooming pots filled with roots, postpone feeding for two or three weeks longer.

Cyclamens needed for spring sales will still be better in frames, where they can be carried for a month, if need be, with the aid of mats.

How are the little seedlings coming on? All should now be germinated and the strongest will be making their second leaves. They should be transplanted into other flats before they become crowded. Use a soil containing half leaf-mold and plenty of coarse sand, but no manure at all. It is not yet too late to make another sowing, if sufficient seedlings have not appeared from the early sowing. These can be grown into nice 6-inch pot plants for Christmas of 1909.

Planting Hardy Perennials.

The best season of the year for dividing and replanting hardy herbaceous perennials is the last half of October and first week in November. It is a great mistake to leave these hardy plants year after year without changing them. They will not give nearly so good results as when they are transplanted every other year. There are few varieties which do not move successfully in the fall, and if this work is done now the plants will become nicely established before the ground freezes up. Phloxes, helianthus, delphiniums, lychnis, boltonias, asters, aquilegias, spiræas, veronicas, gypsophilas, campanulas and aconitums all do much better if fall planted. Pyrethrum roseum and Anemone Japonicum are among the few which are better left until early spring.

All perennials delight in ground which contains a good proportion of humus and has been deeply plowed or spaded. Care should be taken to let the roots dry as little as possible and, of course, the need of firm planting cannot be too strongly emphasized. No winter covering should be given until the ground is fairly frozen. Then a coating of coarse, strawy manure, or better still, forest leaves, held in position by corn stalks or brush, can be spread over them.

Trees and Shrubs.

It is a thousand pities that more planting of shrubs and trees is not done in the fall. It would seem as though the idea that spring was the only real planting season for this class of nursery stock is so strongly imbedded in many minds that fall planting is looked upon as a pure heresy. There may be some of the colder states where spring work is the better of the two, as the ground freezes tight in these sections soon after planting has been done, perhaps with an insufficiency of moisture at the roots. To this latter cause more failures are due than to the severity of the cold, but over a wide section of the country there are so many positive advantages in fall planting that anyone who once tries it will never want to depend entirely on the strenuous springtime for this work.

Nurserymen should lay more stress in their advertisements on the advantages of fall setting out of trees, shrubs and perennials, and specify the few kinds which are better left over until spring. It is not now a good season to move any evergreens. After August and early September, the next best season will be the last part of April and first half of May, but with a few exceptions deciduous trees and shrubs can with great advantage be moved now rather than wait until frost leaves the ground.

DISTANCE APART.

Will you please inform me how far apart large field-grown plants of Princess of Wales violets should be planted in hothouses in October, to obtain the best results?

J. R.

Ten inches each way should be ample for Princess of Wales, even in soil where the foliage will grow large.

HIBISCUS COCCINEUS.

Kindly tell us whether Hibiscus coccineus is a tender plant or a hardy herbaceous perennial.

J. W. H.

Hibiscus coccineus is a tender perennial, except in the warmer southern states. It will not winter outdoors in your state, Indiana. The roots should be lifted and stored in a frame, which can receive some protection, or a cellar.

C.

LORRAINE BEGONIAS.

My Lorraine begonias are not doing well. I have them in a rose house on a west bench next the wall, and do not know if they have sun enough. The leaves turn brown in spots. Should they be sprayed?

S. M.

A temperature of 60 degrees at night until the flowers are fairly well expanded, and a position well up to the glass are requirements for the successful culture of these useful winter flowering plants. They should not be sprayed at all unless the presence of a big crop of mealy bug necessitates it. Even then, great care will be required, or the plants will be seriously damaged. Lorraine begonias should have little shade at this season. In the north many growers keep their plants in the full sun, but in your warmer latitude (Kansas) a light shading would seem necessary. Elevate your plants well. Keep water off the foliage as much as possible, and do not use any liquid manure unless you are sure the pots and pans are well filled with roots. Better avoid chemical fertilizers altogether.

THE SOUTHERN

BULB STOCK....

MR. REID HAS A FINAL WORD.

In the REVIEW of October 1, on page 12, Mr. Guille has evinced great surprise at the stand which I have taken relative to sending southern-grown bulbous stock to the Philadelphia market. It seems strange to me that he should be surprised, as I expressed my views plainly in his hearing at the Florists' Club in this city.

My one reason for discouraging the production of that stock, and putting it on the market here, is because it has such a tendency to demoralize business conditions in general. Bulbous stock has heretofore been made welcome by the trade, when they were able to realize some profits, and also by the flower buyers, but in recent years, with the terrible influx of that kind of stock, it has seemed to demoralize the business, not only in that particular line, but others as well.

Mr. Guille has asked me to explain why I consider their competition in the flower market as unfair. I shall endeavor to do so. I am satisfied to abide by the decision of the trade in general whether I am right or not.

In the first place, everyone here who forces bulbs does so for the flowers. This is the only thing that they can derive any revenue from; while on the other hand the Virginian growers are engaged in the business of producing bulbs and consequently not depending on the sale of cut flowers for profits. In other words, the money which they get out of cut flowers is a side issue, or what we might call a gain. Then again, their labor does not cost them fifty per cent of what the florists of this section have to pay for their help. An acre of land where they are located could be purchased for less than what the ground on which a greenhouse located here would cost. Then again, they are favored with climatic conditions which enable them to grow bulbous stock in enormous quantities outdoors, in competition with men who are obliged, after buying their bulbs and paying the dealer's profits, to force the bulbs under glass.

These are a few of the reasons which I think will be sufficient to convince any man that as far as the general good of the trade is concerned, the competition is unfair.

Mr. Guille states that if any one has discovered a cheaper way of producing bulb blooms, it ought to redound to his credit. To that I would say amen. But no one has unearthed any new secret in botany. On the other hand, the growers in the south are going back to the primitive method of growing bulbs outdoors. It is a known fact that daffodils have grown wild in Gloucester county, Virginia, since it was first settled.

About the tariff: I am not going to discuss that, because if I did some of our politicians might be put out of a job; but just to state in passing that judging from the tide of emigration to this country all the time, conditions must necessarily be an improvement over those of countries of the old world. It is my candid opinion that the man who grows flowers at an enormous expense during the winter months, when the dealer makes his money, is entitled to some consideration, and ought to be protected against such competition as above stated.

As to comparing the stage coach and the railroad, you must certainly know that for every dollar invested in the former there were thousands invested in the latter; and it is only owing to such development that the Virginia grower of bulbs is enabled to put his secondary crop in competition with the florists who force the bulbs under glass at distant points.

Mr. Guille wonders if I have any idea what it costs the Virginians to produce their flowers and place them on the market. I have a general idea, but nothing very definite. One thing I do know, however; were they depending entirely for their profits on the amount realized from the flowers they would not stay in that line of business very long, for I hardly think, taking it altogether, the bulb growers last season got the first cost out of their bulbs, owing to this competition which I have designated as unfair.

Mr. Guille seems now to put the blame for the glut on the wholesale florists. It seems to me that they have enough troubles of their own without trying to load them down with any more. Supposing that we stopped shipments for a day or two; I do not see that it would improve conditions any; if they did not come to Philadelphia they would go somewhere else. That is why I say that it has a tendency to be far-reaching in its effect.

Mr. Guille also states that the southern bulb growers are prepared to sacrifice a little for advertising purposes. It seems to me that they are working from the wrong end, for they are engaged in the business of producing bulbs for the florists to force, and they can rest assured that no man is going to buy bulbs and force them except he can do it with a profit, and under the existing conditions that would be an utter impossibility. It seems to me our gentlemen from the south are making the same fatal mistake as was made by the lily bulb growers in Bermuda, by cutting the flowers and sending them to this country, and the result was, as everyone knows, that it ruined the quality of the bulbs, and it was necessary for the government to take the matter in hand, and at the present time the lily growers are afraid to risk the product of that island, while the Japanese lilies are much in demand.

Mr. Guille also states that the time is not far distant when every family in the United States will insist upon having flowers on the dining-table. We are all hoping that the time will soon come, and if he undertakes to supply that demand from good old Virginia, it will be necessary for him to sell them at a much higher price than what they were sold for in the home market at Norfolk, if he wants to make any money.

It is only fair to state that the greater amount of flowers which have been sent to this market have been fine, and it has always been a matter of regret to me that they were sold so cheaply, but under the conditions which prevailed, owing to the quantity which comes into the market, there is nothing to do but move them at some price. It is my belief that if the distribution of this bulbous stock could be eliminated or at least modified, it would be much better for all concerned.

Three of the Varieties of Dahlias Described by George S. Stoddard.

VARIETIES OF DAHLIAS.

As the dahlia season is about ended, it occurs to me that some of your correspondents might write an interesting article giving the characteristics of some of the new varieties of cactus and decorative dahlias, which have been introduced within the last three years. I am only a beginner with these plants and my dahlia crop for the last two years has been a failure, owing to conditions which I could not control. In preparing such a paper, it is my idea that for the cactus type the Countess of Lonsdale should be taken as a standard, as without a doubt it has all the desirable characteristics, excepting possibly color, of the true cactus type.

I have found that the descriptions in the florists' catalogues generally omit the undesirable characteristics, such as soft wood, weak stem and shy bloom.

Some time ago you published an article on peonies, reviewing a large number of varieties, with a short description of each variety, and to me a similar article on dahlias would be of great interest.

WM. W. MACFARLANE.

Notes on Varieties.

Aurora.—A dahlia of German origin, producing flowers from five to seven inches in diameter, having a cream colored center, shading to amber, then to pink with white tips. A fine flower for decorations, showing up well under artificial light.

Ivanhoe.—This is an English dahlia of a fine straw color, with slight shadings of amber. It is altogether a fine dahlia and very free.

Papa Charnut.—A French decorative variety of large size, with flowers measuring six to eight inches in diameter. It is a most beautiful shade of crimson maroon. The flowers are freely produced and every one perfect.

Sambo.—A welcome addition to the dark varieties of cactus dahlias. The flowers are a rich, dark maroon, with the center almost black. Of good size and fine form.

Wm. Marshall.—Another English dahlia of recent introduction, and one which attracts a good deal of attention. It is a rich, ripe straw color, with a lighter center. The flowers are of large size and freely produced. One of the best for decoration.

Marguerite Bouchon.—This is a French cactus dahlia, and one that is sure to be in large demand. The color is a most beautiful shade of pink, with white tips. It is a massive flower, always full to the center, and freely produced. This and the two following varieties are shown in the illustrations.

Yvonne Cayeux.—A pure white cactus dahlia, of fine form and very free. The florets are straight and the flowers are borne on long stems. Of French origin.

Schwan.—Here is by far the most beautiful white cactus dahlia yet produced. It is as pure white as the snow.

The incurved and twisted petals make it a most graceful and characteristic flower for all-around use. The habit of growth is all that can be desired. The flowers are thrown well up on long, stiff stems. This dahlia is highly prized in Germany, where it originated.

Directeur Quennec.—A good French dahlia, and very free. Color, pale yellow, with slight shadings of copper and splashings of white.

Reliable.—An English novelty. As its name implies, it is a truly reliable variety. I have yet to see one flower with an open center. From one plant, during this exceptionally dry season, twenty large, perfect flowers could have been cut at one time. It is a fine dahlia in every way. Color, yellow at the base; the outer petals are salmon, with a sheen of faint scarlet.

Alight.—Another English dahlia of good texture and fine form. The florets are like needles, perfectly set together in large numbers, making a very full flower. A free bloomer. Color, rich orange scarlet.

Mme. Henri Cayeux.—Here is a French dahlia, and without doubt the finest in cultivation. The flowers are very large, with needle-like petals, well set and full. Color, a most pleasing shade of pink, with each petal tipped white. It is a flower of great merit.

POT PLANTS.

I have some nice plants of Browallia speciosa major, Torenia Fournieri and Matricaria capensis alba. The seeds were sown about the middle of August. When may I expect them to bloom? What temperature, and what is the best size pots to use?

L. K.

Browallia speciosa major and Torenia Fournieri should be given a winter temperature of 50 to 55 degrees at night. If kept potted along, they will commence flowering in April. As a rule, pots six inches in diameter are sufficiently large for good sized plants. Matricaria capensis alba is perhaps better known as Chrysanthemum parthenoides alba. This is a quite vigorous growing variety and should have 7-inch to 8-inch pots. It will not give much flower before early summer, and is not equal to the marguerites in commercial value. It will pay you better to take cuttings of the latter now and grow them on rather than trouble with the matricarias.

Loveless Asks Aid.

Now that the chrysanthemum once more claims our notice, it seems an opportune moment to call attention to the great exhibition soon to be held in Chicago, and to impress upon the many admirers of the queen of autumn the importance of lending their assistance in making this a memorable occasion in the history of the chrysanthemum in America.

It is encouraging to note the progress that has been made in the development of this charming flower, and all growers are invited to exhibit their productions at the national flower show, and to make this the greatest exhibition of perfect flowers that has ever been held.

This particular section is given over to the Chrysanthemum Society of America, and it is the duty of every member to see that our section is much above the average, a credit to our society, an inspiration to the general public who visit the show, and incidentally an expression of our good will for the S. A. F., under whose auspices the national show is being held.

Send for a schedule, look over your available blooms, and enter in as many classes as possible. This will be the best means of expressing your interest in the success of the national flower show.

ALFRED J. LOVELESS,
President Chrysanthemum Society of America.

SOUTHERN EVERGREENS.

"There is a fair crop in the vicinity of Evergreen, Ala.," says E. A. Beaven. "High grade southern wild smilax is one of the several popular greens that are shipped. This light and graceful decorative is becoming more popular every year, as freezing does not affect it and it will keep almost indefinitely in moderate temperature. This stock will last in a decoration a long time and, as it dries green, it looks well even after it has dried out. It requires no technical knowledge to handle it and dealers find it sells to an advantage to dry goods stores, churches, bar rooms, hotels, cafes and other large consumers, as well as to florists for the better class of large decorations. This smilax is packed in six sizes, weighing from fifteen to fifty pounds. The smallest package contains enough to cover 100 feet of wall space and the largest 600 feet of surface. The size of the case is 2x2x4 feet. A carload is from seventy to ninety packages.

"Magnolia foliage is packed in the same size cases as smilax and contains from 100 to 600 sprays of the foliage and brings about the same price. Magnolia leaves for the manufacture of magnolia wreaths are packed in flour barrels or boxes.

"The holly crop will compare favorably with the quality of other years. The standard holly package is 2x2x4 feet.

"Long needle pines are regarded as beautiful as a palm and are practically indestructible. They stand rough handling and are splendid keepers. They go forward packed in paper lined barrels, tops burlaped, containing sixty to 100 pines each, and occupy as much space in a car as two standard cases. This product cannot be stacked, as they will heat if piled and shipped loose.

"Sabal pine leaves are quoted in sizes from 24 to 40 inches, with stems from one to three feet long, and weigh about forty pounds to the hundred. A standard case holds about 250 leaves. These leaves will keep for months if kept in a cool, damp place, packed in the original cases. They are used in various ways as a decorative, giving a most pleasing contrast and tropical effect in winter.

"Chamærops palm crowns have the same keeping quality as sabal leaves. They are the natural palm plant with the roots removed and vary in size from three feet high, with four to six leaves, to large specimens six to eight feet high, with twelve to twenty-six leaves. They are sold in assorted sizes by the hundred, averaging in weight about four pounds each when packed for shipment.

"This section has a reputation for the fine quality of mistletoe it ships. The stock is packed in five to ten pound hampers or boxes. Galax leaves, either green or bronze, are packed in cases of 10,000. Southern gray moss, sometimes called Florida moss, is a moss that grows in large, graceful festoons from the forest trees in this section and is both a novelty and beautiful decorative. It is shipped in 25-pound bags."

COLOR IN MARKET PLANTS.

Among the latest introductions, says a writer in speaking of the plants offered at Covent Garden market, London, the new pink varieties of spiræa attract most attention. The prices this season have been too high for ordinary work, and in most instances the plants have not been quite up to a high standard of cultivation. Some growers have formed rather a bad opinion of them, yet the same thing occurs with most new introductions. Taking the plants as seen from various growers, there has been a considerable difference. In most instances the variety Peach Blossom has been the best color, and Queen Alexandra has been the best in habit of growth and has had larger spikes of bloom, but they are so nearly alike that for market purposes they will simply be called "pink" spiræas. In regard to the color, I find that much depends upon careful attention to watering, and a regular supply of manure of moderate strength. It is a matter that is not often referred to, but with many plants which vary in color, it will be found that though sun and light have a considerable influence, proper attention to manuring and watering are great factors.

It seems the same with most plants with pink flowers. Taking the hydrangeas, the same variety varies considerably from different growers, and Verbena Miss Willmott also varies. In some plants selection for propagating is a great point, but with the hydrangeas I have not found that there is any great advantage, soil and treatment being the chief factors in the production of color, and the dwarf plants grown from cuttings stuck late in the season, after the flower buds are set, seem to come the brightest color.

Much might be written regarding color. For all market purposes color is of more importance than perfect form in flowers. I find that the clear pink is favorite. I do not know if it is by accident or by her own selection, but two of the most popular flowers we have are Verbena Miss Willmott, and Sweet Pea Miss Willmott. In regard to either it will require something wonderfully good to displace them.

WESTERVILLE, O.—J. F. Sked has just purchased a typewriter.

CHATHAM, N. Y.—R. E. Shuphelt, with his mother and sister, will spend the winter at Fruitland Park, Fla. They sailed from New York October 13.

RICHMOND, IND.—G. R. Gause has just completed three new houses, of the Dietsch V gutter construction, with angle iron purlins. The houses are also equipped with the Evans ventilator. At a recent flower show held in this city, in connection with the fall festival, Mr. Gause had an unusually fine exhibit, which the local papers state would certainly have won some prizes if classes had been provided for his entries. He reports that business during the summer has been active, his last month's trade having been exceptionally good.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Soil for Next Season.

Have you given the matter of soil for next season any thought? Perhaps you have been too busy with the stock in the houses, getting it in shape for the winter. A good occupation, indeed, but not the only thing that needs to be thought of before winter is here, with its rains, snows and frosts, when the handling of soil is out of the question. The problem of supplying proper soil for the carnation benches is one of the most important ones the grower is confronted with and is worthy of his best attention.

The grower who begins preparing his soil the fall before he wants to use it never finds it necessary, at the last moment, to use "any old soil" he may be able to get hold of. He usually has first-class soil to use, too. In fact, there is everything to be gained and nothing to be lost in preparing the soil in the fall.

Soil From the Home Place.

If the land from which the soil is to be taken is on the place, it is a comparatively easy matter. Select the particular spot from whence it is to come and plow it over, leaving it in as rough a state as possible. This is to allow the weather to penetrate it thoroughly, and to let the frosts kill the weeds, etc., that were growing on it. A good, heavy sod makes the ideal soil for compost. During the winter you can haul and spread on it a good, heavy coat of manure—about one-fourth as much manure as you intend to take of the soil. Better not put this on, however, until the soil has been well frozen. In the spring the whole thing will be disked and plowed until it is thoroughly mixed and pulverized, after which it is to be plowed over every few weeks until wanted for the benches. The above is what we would consider the ideal manner of preparing soil for the greenhouse.

Soil From a Distance.

If, however, you must have the soil hauled from a distance, a somewhat different method is necessary and the wisdom of fall preparation is even greater than in the other method, described above. In this case it must be hauled and deposited in a pile or rick, piled in alternate layers with manure. In the spring this is turned over, mixed and pulverized and turned over again as often as possible before it is put into the benches. This latter method is by far the more expensive, because all the work must be done by hand, while in the other way the work is all done with horsepower.

In selecting the spot for the compost pile, be sure you find a place where the water will drain away properly, or the bottom of the pile will become soggy and sour. Also try to get the pile as handy to the greenhouse entrance as possible. Much valuable time is often lost by having the soil pile too far away, thus making a longer haul when wheeling into the benches than is necessary. Also get enough good soil for potting the young plants this winter, under cover, so that it can be gotten whenever wanted. We use hotbed sash for covering this soil, believing that the light is better for it than the dark.

A. F. J. BAUR.

REMEDY FOR RUST.

Will you please send me at once a cure for carnation rust? I have noticed in the last few days a good deal in spots. It is worse on a side bench at the side ventilators. I bought stock last spring and noticed some rust on it, but supposed it would disappear when the stock was planted out in the field. The carnations have been benched about six weeks and the stock is thrifty and nice. I have been in the business for about fifteen years here and have never been bothered with rust before. I bought this place last fall and had no rust, but I understand that the man who had it the year before had his carnations ruined with it.

J. R. J.

There is no remedy I know of for killing rust on carnations that will not also kill the plants. The best way is to prevent its appearance, or spreading. This can best be done by careful culture, aided by a few mild measures calculated to keep conditions unfavorable to its development. A few years ago we used a solution of arsenic to spray the plants with, but while it may have destroyed the rust, it did also, in a great many cases, do great damage to the plants. Now we employ more harmless methods, with a view to controlling rather than destroying it.

If the rust is bad in spots, I would advise you to pick off all the affected leaves and burn them. Then dust the plants with grape dust, or sulphur and lime mixed in equal proportions. Keep this on several days before syringing it off, after which more may be dusted on. Do as little syringing as possible until you have it under control.

If you heat by steam, a pinch of sulphur dropped here and there on the pipes will help to check the rust. Give all the ventilation possible at all times without creating a draught directly on the plants. In fact, you will find a fresh, dry, buoyant atmosphere the best preventive of all such troubles. Like all of them, this disease requires a humid atmosphere to be able to develop, and you should strive to maintain just the opposite in your houses. The fact that there is moisture along the side ventilators does not signify anything, unless you had them open during chilly weather, and gave the plants a check. The variety you planted there may be more subject to the disease than those you have planted on the other beds.

Experienced carnation growers do not fear this disease as much as they do some of the others, like fairy ring or stem-rot, nor as much as they feared it a few years ago. Some years ago, when the rust first spread itself over the country and did a great deal of damage before we learned how to control it, a party of growers visited a carnation growing establishment. When they came to a batch in one of the houses of a variety quite badly affected with rust, a general alarm ran through the whole crowd and one excitable grower tore out of the house at breakneck speed, and it is said he never stopped until he reached the street, for fear he might carry the spores home in his clothes. As I said before, we do not fear it that way these days. Occasionally it gets the upper hand of a batch of plants, but usually it can be kept inactive readily enough by careful culture.

As is usual at this time of year, there is pressure to sell ferns, but as soon as room is found for their housing the anxiety to move stock will cease and a steady demand will no doubt clean up all good stock by spring, as it always has.

It appears that a number of people, in making plans in connection with the national flower show at Chicago next month, have overlooked the fact that the dates vary from the ones chosen when Chicago has a five-day show. The national show this year will open Friday, November 6, and continue to and including Saturday, November 14.

OBITUARY.

Julius Schoellner.

Julius Schoellner, of Newark, N. J., died October 5, at his home in that city.
 He was 63 years old and had been failing in health for some time. Coming to Newark from Germany twenty-two years ago, he was employed by the Prudential Insurance Co. and was promoted steadily in office until two years ago, when the state of his health compelled him to give up his position. Since his retirement from the Prudential, Mr. Schoell-ner had been a florist and had built up a prosperous business.

He is survived by a widow, seven children and fourteen grandchildren. His seven children are Julius, Jr., John, Paul and Fred Schoellner, and Mrs.
 Agnes Brown, Mrs. Antonia Grasser and Mrs. Nellie Schafer.

Henry Glins.

Henry Glins died October 8, at his home in Cincinnati. While Mr. Glins was but 49 years old, still he had been in the florists' business for so many years that he was considered one of the old florists of the city. His store was in the Over-the-Rhine district, which is so well known to all visitors to Cincinnati. His loss is mourned by a host of fellow-workers and friends.

Mrs. Anna M. Semmler.

Mrs. Anna M. Semmler, of Belleville, Ill., died October 8, aged 81 years. She was the widow of Michael Semmler, a pioneer florist of that place, and she conducted the first flower store in Belleville.

GENERAL CROP CONDITIONS.

 yield, condition, or production of various crops as reported by the Bureau of Statistics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture October 1, with comparisons. Condition reports upon crops that were harvested before October 1 refer to condition at time of harvest. Esti-

ORDER OF US AND Get What You WANT

You know how we led the market on the early Mums, supplying by the hundreds before others shipped by the dozen—and such stock as not more than one grower in a hundred can get on the early varieties. Well—

Now we are in with the good midseason sorts before some growers have cut a flower of the earliest kinds. Order of us and get such fine varieties as Halliday, Tousey, Omega, Lavender Queen, etc. Can fill any order, for fancy, medium or small mums.

Violets

The cream of the Hudson River doubles and fancy home-grown singles. The violet business is growing rapidly—better get in touch with us.

Beauties

Our Beauties are of exceptional quality—those who want the best should order of us. Cut large and can supply any length in quantity.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Conditions have not changed materially since last report. The pronounced shortening of stock and simultaneous increase in the demand, which were reported last week, were not expected to influence the market for so long, but were still holding the market up at the opening of this week.

The shortage has all along been most pronounced in carnations and it has been a source of surprise the way these flowers held off and the heights to which the price was forced, and held, by a demand which apparently cannot be satisfied with any other stock. It cannot yet be said that any large part of the carnations are of first-class quality and the prices of practically all grades are above their real worth; but the buyers insist, and all the wholesaler can do is to take the money. It is not possible to fill all orders, although it is expected every day that tomorrow will see a large increase in the cut, or a pronounced falling off in the demand, either of which will produce a slump in prices.

The chrysanthemum season at last is fairly upon us. The receipts increased materially toward the end of last week and now it is possible to fill all orders. The earlier varieties, in the hands of some of the most successful growers, are already fairly well cut out and the better mid-season sorts are beginning to make their appearance. With the increased supply, prices have taken quite a fall, but there still is a first-class demand for mums and values are fully up to what they usually are at this date for the same grades; the early sorts did better than usual and the growers of these have no reason whatever for complaint. In fact, this market congratulates itself on the business of the last couple of weeks; it has been excellent, and the volume of sales will show an increase now that mums can be sold in quantity at moderate prices.

The influx of mums and the reduction in prices has affected the market for long Beauties, which had been selling specially well heretofore. While the receipts of long Beauties have not increased to any special extent, they are much slower sale and the prices are weakening. This is not an unusual state of affairs during chrysanthemum season. The shorter grades of Beauties continue in first-class demand and cleaning up well.

There is a good call for Killarney, which is the most popular rose in this market. Richmond is in full crop and some superlative stock is seen, but it sells slowly compared to Killarney. Bride and Maid are not in so heavy supply, nor is the quality so good. There is a brisk call for short roses for funeral work, because carnations are so scarce, but Bride of good length is slow sale, and there continue to be quite fair quantities of Kaiserin. Not nearly so many Chateaux are seen as was the case a year ago.

In the last few days violets have sold quite well. The quality has improved, but is not yet first-class. The wholesalers are inclined to deal quite generously with the buyers of violets, because it is anticipated this market will be heavily supplied this year and everyone handling them is anxious to encourage the use of violets.

Orchids are quite abundant and prices weaker; the fall crop of labiata is at the full. Valley is scarcer and the lower grade has gone up a notch. Easter lilies also are good property and fetching better prices. Not much other stock is in the market. There is no special call for greens.

Various Notes.

Of all the oddities seen in the market, probably the strangest is the one Mrs. Beu has shown at her stand in the Flower Growers' market—Teddy bears made of burs. As an evidence of how excited the town is over the Cubs, Mrs. Beu actually sold for real money over thirty of the bur bears in a couple of days of last week.

It is reported that the responsible Greek merchants of Chicago are forming an association for the purpose of establishing Greek credit. The details are not definitely known, but it is supposed to be on the order of guaranteeing the accounts of all members of the association, with the darkest sort of Greek vengeance for one so devoid of honor as to "stick" the association.

The Market.

Business is good. The demand seems to hold up well and the buyers are in the market early. They pick up in a hurry all of the good stock that comes in, and even the poorer grades are cleaned out before the day is over. It would look as if the regular fall trade had opened up to stay, and it is to be hoped that such is the case.

The arrival of the mum in large quantities is doubtless the cause of the increase in business, and the fact that the stores can get them in almost any quantities has a great deal to do with it. There can be no question but that the flower buyers always wait for the arrival of the mum, as a sort of signal that the flower season is on, and then they start in with a rush to make up for the time they have lost during the summer. Mums have been selling well so far this season and the price obtained for them has been all that could be desired. Glory of the Pacific and Polly Rose are still standards for early white and pink. Quite a number of October Frost have been received in this market, but the best that can be said for it, as grown by the average grower, is that it is a frost. In yellow, Monrovia takes the lead and it is a good thing. At present it tops the market in price, bringing $3 per dozen for all that come in. Several growers are in with small mums, which find a ready sale in this market, which takes kindly to the cheaper grades.

In roses we are well supplied, with Beauties taking the lead and selling the best. White roses also are in good demand. Carnations are scarce, and while for a time it looked as if the supply was going to increase, the increase has failed to materialize as yet. The first Baby primroses of the season arrived last week and were quickly snapped up, as this market is short on small flowers. Some fine longiflorum lilies find a ready market. Lily of the valley is also good property.

Various Notes.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society was a decided success, a large

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The consensus of opinion is that founders' week had no effect on the cut flower business in general. It is summed up in this way: The additional entertainments and decorations in the hotels and restaurants were counterbalanced by the loss in transient trade.

This week has opened better, with brisker demand, both shipping and local, especially the former. The quantity of stock coming into town, however, precludes the possibility of anything but a buyer's market. The feature of the situation which stands out most prominently is the increase in the number of chrysanthemums. Conservative judges estimate that every grower who sent in one flower at this time last year is sending in two today. The result is extraordinarily low prices, which are the more noteworthy when the quality of the stock is considered. It has, as is well known, been an extraordinary growing season, and this fact is clearly shown by the wonderfully high grade of nearly all the chrysanthemums now coming in.

Cattleyas have become so plentiful that the price has fallen, bringing more buyers into the market for this rich flower, hundreds being sold where dozens were used formerly. American Beauties are fine and plentiful. They are selling fairly well. Valley is in splendid demand, the consumption being heavy. Carnations have fallen off a little. Immense quantities of dahlias, of the showiest varieties, were being sold until heavy frost October 12 did serious injury.

Dendrobium formosum can only be obtained in small quantities, but oncidiums are plentiful. Harrisii lilies are in moderate supply. Callas, bouvardia, and mignonette have made their appearance. The last is fine. Cosmos was never better. Immense quantities of superb blooms on stems ranging from two to three feet in length go begging, there being no demand proportionate to the supply. Double violets are improving in quality, and can be shipped anywhere. There is no change in the rose situation. Asters and gladioli are over. Greens are in moderate demand.

The Historical Pageant.

The receipts of the Rapid Transit Co. Friday, October 9, exceeded $77,000, the largest receipts in the history of the company. This was due to its being Historical day in founders' week. The historical pageant, the feature of that day, may be safely chronicled as Philadelphia's proudest achievement of a week of triumphs. A little bit of history in connection with this parade will be of interest to all members of the profession. Exactly ten weeks before J. J. Habermehl's Sons, the well known florists and decorators, of Twenty-second and Diamond streets and the Bellevue-Stratford hotel in this city, signed a contract to furnish all of the sixty-eight tableaux and floats required in the procession. To execute their contract the decorators secured the use of the buildings formerly operated by a brick-making company on York road near Hunting park. The buildings were put in order and from fifty to sixty workmen were kept constantly employed under the superintendence of John P. and Edward Habermehl. Dr. Oberholzer, director of the pageant; Miss Violet Oakley, an artist of renown, and Henry Kambierschee were largely instrumental in planning the artistic details of the work. The result, as everyone admits, was a wealth of beauty and color never before equaled here, or probably anywhere else. Every historic detail was carefully planned and executed. Carpenters, workers in plaster of paris, painters, artists, all worked together to produce the wonderful results seen on Broad street October 9. Great credit is due J. J. Habermehl's Sons for the magnificent success that crowned their efforts.

Two Gold Mines.

The Retailer's.—J. William Colflesh, the successful West Philadelphia florist, attended the October meeting of the Florists' Club for the purpose of voting for George Craig, who so kindly relieved him of the responsibility of the treasury portfolio a year ago. It is not often that Mr. Colflesh comes east of Thirtieth street after dark, but the combined attractions of the annual election and founders' week illumination were strong magnets. Mr. Colflesh is not a talker and, like most men of few words; what he says is usually well worth hearing. On this occasion Mr. Colflesh remarked sententiously to the floral luminary next him, "You have a little gold mine." A bystander questioned him as to his meaning, eliciting information that flowers are cheap this season and the retailer could buy them at low prices and charge his customers just what he pleased. The gold mine, in fact, is right in his store.

The Grower's.—A contented looking grower paused on Eleventh street just north of the store of Robert Crawford, Jr., to pass the time of day with a friend. "I have been bringing my flowers into town all summer," he said; "business is fair and I am satisfied. You see," the speaker added reflectively, "I am not wholly dependent on my greenhouses, because I have a little stone quarry out on my place that pays me a royalty which yields me a very comfortable income each year, with excellent prospects of a continuance."

So, you see, there really are little gold mines on both sides of the fence.

Various Notes.

The Henry F. Michell Co. scored a triumph with its float seen in the industrial parade October 7. This float was described in the REVIEW of September 17. Philip Freud was given an ovation throughout almost the entire length of Broad street as he rode in the procession with his beautiful creation.

John Cook, of Baltimore, sent some fine blooms of his new rose, My Maryland, to W. E. McKissick recently.

Frank Gould, gardener to John T. Morris, read a paper on dahlias before the Germantown Horticultural Society October 12.

M. Rice & Co. report a number of visitors who called during founders' week.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. received many cases of supplies by the steamer Manitou.

The only noteworthy addition to the list of chrysanthemums given last week is Tint of Gold, seen at the store of Berger Bros. October 12.

Lilley & Upton opened as scheduled October 12, but so anxious were some of their growers to begin shipping that flowers began coming in fully five days earlier. Mr. Upton says that the stock has been cleaning up nicely.

Mrs. A. M. Briel, Baltimore, Md., and William F. Gude, Washington, D. C., were among the visitors here during founders' week.

Walter P. Stokes has a beautiful cut of the new Kudzu vine, obtained from a Japanese color plate. Mr. Stokes believes that this vine will have a great future.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons had a handsome wedding decoration October 12. White chrysanthemums and Kriemhilde dahlias were largely used.

Pennock Bros. had many handsome orders for the first debutante tea of the season, which occurred at Rosemont, Pa., October 10.

Robert Craig says Amerpohlii and Todeaoides are the favorite ferns of the day. PHIL.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The wholesale cut flower market held its own well last week, notwithstanding the fact that the mercury registered from 70 to 80 degrees every day. There is plenty of everything one could wish and most of it has cleaned up nicely, but in order to do this the wholesalers realize that prices must be kept so that the public will be able to reach them, and the result is that there have been no high prices.

Beauties, chrysanthemums and roses are the stock which is most plentiful. Carnations are still far short of the demand.

The retail merchants all report a slight increase in business, but say they are selling cheaper than ever before at this time and that it is impossible to sell anything in the way of high-priced stock. They consider it better business to keep things moving and to keep more life in trade, even if the profits are less, than to try to stand for prices such as they have been accustomed to get.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club met Tuesday evening, October 6. Two new members were elected. A report from the float committee was read and the committee continued, with authority to solicit subscriptions to pay expenses. A vote of thanks was also given to the members of the committee for their services.

The club decided to hold a field day, or, rather, it should have been called a visiting day. All members of the club are requested to meet at Schenley conservatories on Tuesday, November 3, at 10:30 a. m. After taking in all the good things there, they will go to Randolph & McClements' Stanton avenue greenhouses, where a lunch will be one of the features. After leaving there, the private places will take up the balance of the day until dark. Do not miss this.

After the regular business had been disposed of, the subject of the evening was taken up, "Garden Flowers and Orchids."

Dr. Schaffer offered a prize of $10 for the best three orchid plants and there were two competitors—David Fraser, gardener for H. C. Frick, and Mr. Crooks, gardener for James H. Parks. The judges, Wm. Falconer and P. S. Randolph, not being able to decide on a winner, divided the prize.

Henry Negley exhibited a fine collection of about ten varieties of the choicest cypripediums, cattleya and Oncidium splendendum.

of the "Flat Horned Elks," and is sporting a moose-head button.

W. J. Smith is cutting some good chrysanthemums, which he is shipping to A. W. Smith. He has also added quite a collection of orchids, which he proposes to increase, believing that will be one of the paying stocks for growers for this market.

Myers & Samtman, of Wyndmoor, Philadelphia, Pa., who walked off with a number of the Beauty prizes at the rose show at Chicago last spring, are shipping quantities of fine Beauties to this market.

Mr. Koerbel, of Jeannette, Pa., who, with John Bader, has just returned from abroad, has the sympathy of his host of friends in the loss of his father.

The McCallum Co. reports trade fully up to expectations for the first month in business.

While frosts seem to be reported from many sections, Pittsburg has not up to this date had what could be called a killing frost.

The subscription book for the William Scott memorial was at the club Tuesday night, but there is still room for the names of any growers in this vicinity who feel that they owe the writings of Mr. Scott anything. They will find the book at the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.'s for a few days, after which it will be returned.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There was not much to brag about as to the business done last week. Those who handled plants were busy with decorations for fall openings of department stores. There were a few small weddings and a limited amount of funeral work. Some of the leading florists say there is plenty of room for improvement. The weather has been favorable, cool and clear, but not as yet a heavy frost. The wholesale houses have been loaded down with roses and the high priced grades seem to move slowly. Even Beauties were slow sale. Carnations have been in good demand. These are not overplentiful and anything that is choice is cleaned up daily.

Chrysanthemums are not yet plentiful, but there is no great demand for them as yet. More are promised for this week. A few good California violets are coming in, but not fancy enough to bring anything like a fair price. Cosmos is becoming plentiful and cheap. Extra good valley is in the market.

The increased sale for roses and chrysanthemums expected for the Veiled Prophets' ball Tuesday, October 6, failed to materialize. Those who laid in an extra supply say that the demand for this occasion was not half that of former years.

The growers were busy last week taking in outdoor stock and potting chrysanthemum plants. Nearly all of them will have some extra fine pot plants this season.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its regular meeting in the old rooms at Eleventh and Locust streets, October 8, with a fair attendance. President W. C. Young presided. The trustees were given power to select a new meeting hall. A. W. Murray, retail florist on Easton avenue, made application for membership. Ten applications were voted on and nine received favorable ballots and were declared members. They were as follows: Julius Koenig, William H. Ossie, Louis Mourer, J. H. Kahrs, O. H. J. Landel, T. F. Barrman, L. W. Spangler, L. W. Schviever, Sr., and L. W. Schviever, Jr.

John Steidel, state vice-president of the S. A. F., will meet with the trustees of the club next week to arrange for transportation for the members who will attend the national flower show to be held at Chicago. Quite a delegation from here is expected to make the trip.

The proposition to change the meetings from afternoon to evening led to quite a discussion. On vote it was decided that alternate months the club will meet at night, so as to give the employees a chance to attend the meetings.

W. C. Smith read his paper, "In What Way Socially can the Members of this Club Be Brought Closer Together?" which was well received. It contained many good points, on which the trustees were instructed to work the coming season. For the good of the club, H. C. Ostertag, chairman of the trustees, announced that a florists' bowling club will be organized and that all florists who care to may become members. The meetings will be at the Marquette hotel alleys, Eighteenth and Washington avenue, Monday nights.

The next meeting of the club will take place Thursday night, November 12, at 8 o'clock, in a new meeting room, which will be announced later. The meeting adjourned to a nearby cafe for refreshments.

Various Notes.

Henry Emunds and E. W. Guy, of Belleville, were callers last week. Both say business is picking up, with quite a lot of funeral work.

Thomas W. Merritt, nurseryman of Grandview, Tenn., was found by the police wandering the streets in a dazed condition Wednesday, October 7. He had in his possession $50 in cash and $500 in certified checks and said he was on his way to California. He was held until his wife arrived from Grandview to take him home.

Hugo Gross, of Kirkwood, is sending Smith & Co. a lot of good California violets.

Henry Aue, of Lindenwood, has been supplying C. A. Kuehn with a fine lot of extra fine quality smilax.

Herman Steinmiller now has charge of the Bixby Greenhouses, the only private place in St. Louis. William Hoernly, who vacated the position, has gone to Hugo Schaff, who was foreman at the greenhouses at Tower Grove park, has given up the position and is now foreman in the public school greenhouses.

Mrs. Anna M. Semmler, aged 81 years, died in Belleville Thursday, October 8. She was known for half a century in Belleville as the Flower Lady and conducted the first flower store in Belleville. She was the widow of the late Michael Semmler, who was an old florist. She is survived by two sons and four daughters. The funeral took place Saturday, October 10. Mrs. Semmler was well known to all the florists in the city, who extend their sympathy to the bereaved family.

Adolph Brix was out with his new auto in the German parade, tastefully decorated for the occasion.

Miss Schnell, of East St. Louis, has a new delivery wagon, all white, that makes a handsome appearance.

A. Woerner, of Woerner Bros., Clayton, was married Wednesday, October 7. This will be a surprise to his many friends in the trade.

Ostertag Bros. celebrated their twenty-second anniversary Tuesday, October 6, at their store. Scores of friends and customers called during the day and evening. Refreshments were served in the evening and everybody received a handsome souvenir. Julius Koenig, the manager of the store, had everything in fine shape to receive the guests.

Fred Foster, of the Foster Floral Co., says that his firm had the contract for the plant decorations at the New Maryland hotel October 3, and not the firm mentioned in the last issue.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Perfect fall weather, with a temperature of 40 degrees, greeted the opening of the week, but there is little life in the cut flower market. The prices, October 12, were disappointing. Selected Beauties brought as little as $12 a hundred. This is a tumble with a vengeance. Roses of all varieties are down. Only a novelty like White Killarney dares to demand over 5 cents. The majority of the specials of Maid and Bride never get above 4 cents. They won't while the flood of chrysanthemums continues. It may be of interest to note the varieties of roses coming to the market. Ernst Asmus & Son are the authority and they know, for they send them. In addition to the above are Testout, Cusin, Morgan, Queen Beatrice, Golden Gate, Chatenay, Killarney, Richmond, Hoste, Deegen, Sunrise, Kaiserin and White Killarney.

Chrysanthemums are coming in numbers and perfection beyond all expectations. In consequence, prices are far below last year at this time and the retail windows tell the story of low cost and profusion, for they are everywhere beautifully decorated and the city is a veritable flower garden, for there is a mum show on nearly every block from Harlem to the Battery. The Beauty has felt the invasion of the mum the most, as its price now indicates.

Dahlias continue to arrive in great abundance, and in fine condition. The delay of frost has made them a profitable crop this season and the new single and cactus kinds have been popular and satisfactorily marketed.

Carnations grow longer and larger every day and prices are steady. Cosmos is plentiful and perfect. Orchids are here again in beauty and variety.

Violets look like themselves at last. Prices are improving with quality, but it will take some time to raise them to the place they ought to occupy.

The autumn weddings are about due. The society columns are full of announcements. Some of the retailers already show their bookings with cheerful faces. In fact, everywhere the tone is one of hopeful expectancy and faith in the return of public confidence and enterprise.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its monthly meeting October 12, President Weathered in the chair. The crowd was fully up to the average, and the exhibits many and varied. Charles H. Totty exhibited eight fine mums, which were given suitable recognition. A pink sport of Glory of Pacific, exhibited by Samuel Cockburn & Sons, Woodlawn, N. Y., received a vote of thanks. White and pink pompon chrysanthemums, by Hartman & Wagenfohr, of Woodside, L. I., received a cultural certificate. Carnation Georgia, by J. D. Cockcroft, of Northport, L. I., was given a preliminary certificate. A new blue salvia from Joseph A. Manda gained for him a vote of thanks. Honey-suckles and roses from Conard & Jones, West Grove, Pa., also earned for them a vote of thanks.

Resolutions on the death of A. B. Rose and Alexander Wallace were read.

P. O'Mara reported for the transportation committee, with a surplus from the amount voted for the S. A. F. convention. The committee was discharged with thanks and immediately reappointed to arrange for the trip to the flower show in Chicago. A special sleeper is to be provided and assurance of an attendance of ten was made. Doubtless this number will be doubled, and all intending to go are requested to send their names at once to Secretary John Young.

L. W. Kervan and Ambrose Cleary were elected to membership, and William Godhart, S. E. Briner and C. W. Scott nominated.

In response to the request of the national flower show committee, President Weathered appointed as judges Messrs. C. H. Totty, of Madison; William Eccles, of Oyster Bay, and Harry Turner, of Port Washington.

Will Rickards spoke in behalf of a smoker or stag entertainment at the November meeting and the club heartily approved of the proposition and left to the committee the selection of a special evening for the purpose other than the regular club night. Mr. Young distributed schedules of the New York flower show in November, and also gave notice of a motion at the next meeting to reduce the club's life membership fee to $50.

Mr. Marshall spoke for the new bowling club. Harry Bunyard gave an interesting and amusing account of his visit to England.

The lecturer of the evening, Antoine Wintzer, of West Grove, Pa., was accorded a warm welcome and a hearty vote of thanks for his address on "Hardy Clematis and Other Climbers," which

Various Notes.

B. J. Slinn, Jr., reports W. H. Hay, of Montreal and Ottawa, a visitor in New York.

It looks as if the wholesale florists will gradually absorb all the ground floors and first stories on West Twenty-eighth street, from Broadway to Seventh avenue, and almost every interest congregates on this street. Rumor says the big building now being erected between Sixth and Seventh avenues is to have a cut flower company as its control.

Quite a large delegation from New York will attend the national flower show in Chicago, November 6. It would be well if those intending to make the trip would send word to President Traendly in advance. Much interest is already manifested by exhibitors and a great success is universally hoped for, because its triumph means a repetition in New York.

Harry Gessner, the Imperial florist, is well pleased with his location and has made a success of the venture from the start.

The new wholesaler, Nicholas C. Schreiner, opens Thursday, October 15, at 41 West Twenty-eighth street. The Bowling Club showed its good will and confidence last Wednesday by making him treasurer. He is a member of the New York Florists' Club and the S. A. F. M. A. Bowe's windows were aflame Monday with orchids in baskets, and a fine assortment of the large mums.

Lyman B. Craw, of the Lord & Burnham Co., speaks glowingly of his four weeks' western trip and shows plainly the benefit of the glorious air and climate of Colorado.

Alfred Futterman, for twelve years with Gunther Bros., and Miss Brenner will be married October 20.

The engagement is announced of Miss Anna Levitt, bookkeeper for Alex. J. Guttman, and S. Wolff, a prominent manufacturer on Broadway.

George Saltford has accepted appointment as judge at the Tarrytown flower show November 5.

Myer, on Madison avenue, had the pink mum decoration for the Powell-McGoey wedding last week, at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, and some elaborate funeral designs from the official staff at General Fitzgerald's obsequies. New signs and decorations make the store thoroughly up-to-date and the conservatories have absorbed all the twenty-foot palms secured at the Elliott-Biltmore auction.

The monthly meeting of the Horticultural Society of New York was held October 14, at the Museum of National History, where the flower show will take place November 17 to 20.

Stumpp & Walter Co. carried off the blue ribbon last week for their display of bulbs at the Danbury, Conn., fair.

The fall shows are close at hand and unfortunately several of them in this vicinity find it impossible to make the dates harmonize. November 5, for instance, they will be running at top speed at Tarrytown, N. Y.; Red Bank, N. J.; Glen Cove, L. I., and Hartford, Conn. Madison has October 29 and 30 all to itself and the big attendance of the trade is thereby assured.

C. H. Totty and Wm. Duckham, of Madison, were in the city October 10.

J. J. Coan, the manager of the Growers' Cut Flower Co., at 39 West Twenty-eighth street, is delighted with the opening send-off accorded him.

Auctions continue at the marts on Vesey street every Tuesday and Friday. The retailers responded well to the opportunity for stocking up with decorative palms. Cleary's boxwood is arriving,

A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the Rustic Construction Co., manufacturers of rustic furniture, greenhouses, fences, etc., at 34 Fulton street, by these creditors: Henry W. Utter, $375 on an assigned claim of the Carnegie Trust Co.; Warren L. Samson, $1,175 on an assigned claim of the Carnegie Trust Co., and Arthur White, $38. It was alleged that the company is insolvent, made preferential payments and transferred merchandise and accounts $1,000. Judge Holt appointed Lawrence B. Cohen receiver, bond $2,500. Liabilities are estimated at $15,000 and assets $5,000. The business has been established over twenty-five years and has been carried on by this corporation since January 18, 1905, when it was incorporated with capital stock of $10,000. The receiver obtained leave from Judge Holt to continue the business for thirty days, as the company has some good contracts on hand. The company has done work for some wealthy people, and its trouble is due to inability to collect outstanding accounts from some of them. The company has a plant at Peekskill.

The Empire Floral Co. has been incorporated with $25,000 authorized capital stock by T. J. McGreevey, J. Ansbacher and M. Lustig.

land on the Lusitania October 8, having been away just five weeks. He went over to see his people. He did not visit many in the trade, but found time to take in a Royal Horticultural Society show.

To Mrs. Lulu Small, wife of Charles A. Small, the United States government has presented a gold medal in recognition of her bravery in saving the lives of two women who were drowning in the surf. When an agent of the United States Treasury Department came to this city to deliver the medal he found Mrs. Small a patient in the French Hospital, recovering from an operation made necessary by the injuries received by Mrs. Small while she was rescuing Mrs. Allan S. Towson and Mrs. Edmund Austin Mays at Sea Gate September 17, 1907. Mr. Small was present when the gold medal was presented to his wife. After the presentation Mr. Small said she told him that the medal would be an incentive to her in an effort to recover her health as soon as possible.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The improvement, which came a week ago, only lasted for two or three days and conditions are again the reverse of satisfactory. It was hoped that the cessation in supplies of asters and other outdoor flowers would galvanize some life into the business and much disappointment is felt at the way flowers are selling. One day business is fairly good, while on the next it is the reverse. Chrysanthemums are now in abundant supply and are already too numerous for the demand. Prices for these have sunk to unusually low figures. While a few extras may make $1.50 to $2 per dozen, many go at $3 to $4 per hundred. The most abundant varieties are now Glory of the Pacific and Polly Rose. Others seen are October Frost, Monrovia and Golden Glow, with a few Montmort, and Rosiere, a good pink.

Roses continue to improve. In addition to Beauties, there are good lots of Chatenay, Killarney and Richmond coming in, while Brides and Maids are of fair quality. Sales for these continue rather unsatisfactory. Carnations are not selling as they should, only a few reaching $2 per hundred, others selling as low as 50 cents. Violets average 50 cents per hundred for the best. Some good lilies are coming in. Asters are nearing the end and gladioli and sweet peas are both over for the season.

Exhibition.

The annual fruit and vegetable show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, October 10 and 11, was an excellent one, the exhibits being of an unusually high grade. Among the fruit exhibits, Ellwanger & Barry had a large collection of pears and L. E. Smith, of Annapolis, Nova Scotia, had a display of finely grown apples which were a noteworthy feature. The most meritorious exhibit in the show was the extensive collection of berry-bearing trees and shrubs from the Boston park department, which well merited the silver medal awarded. Specially fine were the following: Symplocos cratægoides, Symphoricarpos racemosus, Cratægus Arkan-sana, C. Oxyacantha, C. punctata, yellow fruit; C. nitida, and C. cordata, Sorbus Americana, Oxydendrum arboreum, Ly-

Who Has Goldfish For Sale?

Goldfish have been widely taken up by Retail Florists as a side line which goes well with flowers and in which there is a good profit. Every few days the REVIEW receives a letter from some florist: "Where can I buy goldfish?" The well-known breeders and shippers of goldfish have all the business they can handle, but doubtless there are others, less widely known, who would welcome some more orders. They will get orders a plenty if they advertise in both depend upon their refrigerators to determine whether their stock shall sell or stay in the store. McCray Refrigerators keep stock in such perfect, fresh and fragrant condition that it cannot help selling, and the McCray uses less ice than any other. It virtually pays for itself. The patented system of air circulation which cools all parts evenly, thoroughly, and with fresh, cold, dry air, is one of the features of

McCray Refrigerators

They are made in the most beautiful finish and substantial construction. They are lined with white enamel, or if you wish, you may have tile, opal glass, mirrors or marble.

There is a wide range of regular sizes of McCray Refrigerators for immediate shipment, although we build them to order for any requirement.

You should have our Catalog No. 71, which describes the detail of these successful and economical refrigerators for the florist.

cium Trevianum, Leycesteria formosa, tender shrub; Berberis (Mahonia) aquifolium, Avonia arbutifolia, Hippophæ rhamnoides, Quereus macrocarpa, Q. bicolor and Euonymus atropurpureus. There were scores of other beautiful varieties shown, the whole being a striking example of the wealth of autumnal beauty to be had in shrubberies from the fruit alone.

Although there were no classes for flowers, W. W. Rawson & Co. had an extensive and artistically arranged display of dahlias, branches of autumn foliage being used with them to excellent advantage. Had the collection been named instead of numbered it would, however, have been more interesting. The same firm had a nice table of seedling dahlias and a large table of gladioli and single tuberoses, prettily arranged with autumn foliage and hardy asters. Mrs. L. E. Towle had a dahlia display and A. E. Hartshorn tuberoses begonias.

Various Notes.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society visited the estate of W. S. & J. T. Spaulding, F. E. Cole gardener, at Beverly, October 7. Great improvements are being made on land recently acquired. The extensive vegetable houses contained a wide range of varieties grown for winter use. Large rose gardens, formal gardens and other features are being developed under a competent landscape architect at great expense. The committee also visited the rose garden of Mrs. Harriet D. Foote, Marblehead, where hundreds of varieties of hardy sorts are grown, hybrid teas doing especially well, and were kindly entertained by C. W. Parker after an inspection of that gentleman's estate, Redgate, Marblehead.

H. F. Calder, of Norwood, is bringing in remarkably fine flowers of Campbell violets for so early in the season.

At the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, October 20, the speaker of the evening will be William Downs, vice-president of the club, on the subject of "Fruit Culture Under Glass." There will be interesting exhibits of chrysanthemums, carnations and other seasonable flowers.

Indications now point to a successful chrysanthemum show November 6 to 9. Specimen plants, which were conspicuously absent last year, will again be in evidence and the show promises to be far superior to that of 1907.

William Sim exhibited a well grown collection of sweet potatoes, grown at Cliftondale, at the show in Horticultural hall, October 10.

A. Roper, of Tewksbury, has already some extra fine flowers on his new variegated seedling carnation, Bay State, which will be introduced next season.

William Nickolson reports his carnations as doing unusually well this season and being now in heavy crop. He is cutting fine blooms of Pacific, Polly Rose, Rosiere and other early chrysanthemums.

Leading dahlia specialists here are practically unanimous in stating that late planting of dahlias, using dry roots, gives much better results than early planting.

Vegetable Forcing.

MUSHROOMS AND RHUBARB.

I have just erected a greenhouse, 25x75, to be used for general stock, and I wish to know if I can grow mushrooms successfully under the west bench and rhubarb under the east bench. The house runs north and south. If so, would you recommend U. S. spawn and when should it be started? H. W. W.

If there are no heating pipes under the bench where you intend to grow the mushrooms, there is no reason why they could not be grown successfully. But, seeing it is an outside bench you mention as the one you want to use, in all probability the heating pipes will run under it. In this case the drying heat from the pipes would prove too much for mushrooms, as one of the most essential conditions to their successful culture is a moist atmosphere. If the spawn is fresh, the kind you mention can be relied on to give good results. You may start any time from now on to the beginning of March.

Rhubarb would also be better under a bench where there are no heating pipes, but it could be grown otherwise by having boards between the roots and the pipes and keeping the roots as far away from the heat as possible, providing they are kept well watered.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

TOMATOES AND LETTUCE.

Can tomatoes and lettuce be grown at a profit in a house 25x100 feet for winter trade when we have good demand for them? In other words, will tomatoes bear well in the winter months in a greenhouse and what degree of heat should I keep? Tennessee soil and no zero weather. H. H. C.

Lettuce and tomatoes require different houses, or a partition in the house, so that they may each have their proper temperature, which is very important. Lettuce requires a night temperature of 45 degrees and tomatoes a night temperature of 65 degrees. The temperature in the daytime runs about 15 degrees higher, providing the weather is bright, but if the weather is cloudy or stormy and dark, the temperature should be kept down accordingly. Many growers make the mistake of trying to make up for the dark weather by putting on a few degrees more heat, and thereby injure their crops.

A house 25x100 would be best in one crop only, either tomatoes or lettuce; either will do well if properly cared for. Tomatoes will pay the best, if well done, but are more difficult to handle and it might be well to try a small number of plants first, before going into it too heavily. Tomatoes in winter sell for 20 cents to 40 cents per pound and should average 25 cents to be profitable. The outdoor varieties are not suitable for forcing. Hothouse varieties are smaller and more prolific. Comet is considered the best variety for use in greenhouses. One row of plants to a bench, three to four feet wide, is all that should be planted. If the bench is nearly six feet wide two rows may be put in. The plants should be one foot apart and all branches and the points of the leaves where they overlap cut off before they get large. The single-stem system is best, like a single-stem chrysanthemum. The fruit grows from the main stalk, which should have a cluster on it for every three leaves. H. G.

LETTUCE THAT WILL NOT HEAD

Will you please tell me how to get the Big Boston lettuce to head? I have had some trouble getting it to head. I have used barnyard fertilizer. If there is a good commercial fertilizer for lettuce, will you please publish it? P. W. M.

Not knowing the general conditions and the cultural methods employed, it is impossible for me to say just why the lettuce does not head up. It may not be doing well for several reasons. The plants may be diseased, too close together or not the variety you think you have. The seed should be purchased of only reliable seedsmen. The plants should be transplanted twice, the last time about eight inches apart, and if in good, loose soil and carefully watered, they should grow rapidly and be headed up and sold before the tenth week is gone, after planting the seed.

If any further trouble is encountered, send more particulars and I will try to give the desired information.

As to fertilizer, there is nothing better than well rotted barnyard manure, well forked into the soil before planting the crop, but an application of nitrate of soda is beneficial. Dissolve about a 3-inch potful in a barrel of water, and water the plants with it about once a week, instead of using pure water on that day. H. G.

H. A. Bunyard, with Arthur T. Bodington, New York, has returned from a trip to England.

It is reported that the holly in Delaware is of fair quality but not so abundant as might be wished. Shippers are holding off for a pretty stiff price before accepting orders even from regular customers.

At Chicago October 13 timothy seed was unchanged. October closed at $3.50 bid and March $3.70 bid and $3.75 asked. Country lots, $2.30@3.40. Clover seed was off 50 cents. October closed at $8. Cash lots, $6.50@8.

At St. Louis, October 7, the United States District Court confirmed the composition offered by the St. Louis Seed Co. and creditors have received from the clerk of the court thirty-three and one-third per cent of their claims.

MR. TWEEDALE, who has been seventeen years in the flower seed and bulb department of Peter Henderson & Co., New York, started October 10, in company with William Park, another employee of the firm, for a trip to Europe for his health. A Marconigram reached the house October 12 that he had died on board the ship and had been buried at sea. P. O'Mara speaks highly of the life and character of the deceased. He was 38 years old and unmarried.

FOUNDERS' WEEK AT DREER'S.

The accompanying illustrations are reproduced from photographs showing the decorations of the Chestnut street establishment of Henry A. Dreer during the celebration of founders' week in Philadelphia.

The window decorations were interesting to many strangers on their way down Chestnut street to visit Independence hall and other places of historic interest in which this neighborhood abounds. The colors used in these decorations were blue and gold, which are the city colors. In the floral window hardy larkspur was used for blue and yellow dahlias for gold, tastefully arranged so that each color would show distinctly. The vegetable window displayed pumpkins and squashes of golden yellow and dark green, the nearest they could come to blue. Many large and heavy specimens were used, each tagged showing weight, and this feature proved especially interesting to the many persons who stopped to look at the display. A large show card painted in blue and gold bore the words, "Some Pumpkins."

The photograph showing the windows was taken late at night, with no other light than the ordinary electric lights in the windows, and has been pronounced an excellent piece of night photography.

THE CROPS.

The government's October crop report shows that the corn crop shrank, in the estimates, 54,000,000 bushels since the September report and is likely to be some 48,000,000 bushels less than the 1907 outturn. The report shows:

Bushels.	1908.	1907.
Spring wheat	233,090,000	224,645,000
Winter wheat	425,940,000	409,442,000
Total wheat	659,030,000	634,087,000
Corn	2,544,000,000	2,592,320,000
Oats	789,161,000	754,443,000
Barley	167,242,000	153,597,000
Rye	30,921,000	31,566,000

PEAS, BEANS AND OTHER CROPS.

Arthur B. Clark, president of the Everett B. Clark Seed Co., writes as follows from East Jordan, Mich., under date of October 9:

"We can now make a fairly intelligent report on the 1908 crop of peas, as a fair portion of our crop is already in store. While we have very few deliveries of beans, we think we are able to estimate pretty well the outcome of that crop.

"Our crop of peas, taking both Wisconsin and Michigan together, is just about a counterpart of the 1907 crop. There is this difference, however, that the Michigan crop is somewhat better this year than a year ago, while the Wisconsin crop is less than a year ago, the average of the two remaining about identical. Another difference is, that this year the dwarfs and early varieties, such as Gradus and Thomas Laxton, are much shorter than they have been for years. This is due to the dry, hot winds of middle June. The Gradus and Laxton are particularly short, several growers reporting barely twofold on Gradus.

"The writer has just returned from a trip through several of the growing sections in both states, and finds no one to be faring any better than ourselves. This, again, augurs a short supply and a recurrence of last season's high values, in view of the fact that a year ago there were two or three sections where there was a large acreage that yielded well. This year the drought has been practically universal and the crop consequently everywhere short.

"Beans look to us, from present indications, like just about a half crop. The sample is of pretty good color, but very small. We have had frost in some one of our bean growing sections each month of the summer, and these frosts, coupled with the drought, have brought about the poorest crop of beans that Michigan has had for several years.

"Our people at the Connecticut office advise us that sweet corn promises fairly well, in spite of the practical failure of corn on high ground, owing to drought in the early part of the summer. Onion seed is thrashing out very disappointingly, falling quite materially short of estimates made at the time of harvest. Our radish crops in Michigan have done well; in fact, surprisingly well, in view of the conditions with which this crop had to contend."

GROWING ONIONS FOR SEED.

"I wish information about raising Prizetaker onions for seed in the San Joaquin valley," says a correspondent of the California Cultivator. "Would it be a profitable investment? What kind of land is best, and will the largest onions produce more or a better grade of seed than the medium size ones? When should I set them out, and how many will I require to set an acre? Would also like to know something about the harvesting and preparing seed for market."

"I would deem it unwise for an inexperienced person to attempt to grow onion seed for market," says the editor. "Reliable seedsmen are very exacting in their contracts for onion seed, and a novice would find, I think, considerable difficulty in effecting a satisfactory sale. Current Comment.

The cooler weather of the last few days has greatly stimulated business and Saturday, October 10, is reported generally as having been the best since last Easter. Carnations and roses furnish the bulk of the stock at present, though violets and chrysanthemums are beginning to make their appearance. Among the former, Leonard Almy, of East Providence, is contributing the finest, although Albert Holscher and L. Williams are bringing in some good ones. In chrysanthemums, Mr. Holscher is in the van with his early Golden Glow. E. E. King, of Attleboro; John Macrae, of this city, and Mr. Almy are also cutting some good blooms. The mums are bringing $1.50 to $2.25 per dozen at retail.

destroyed when the big stock barn at the farm of J. A. Budlong & Son Co., in Auburn, was burned to the ground October 11. The barn contained, besides the horses, more than 150 tons of hay and several carloads of grain. The firm is an extensive grower of roses and carnations as well as produce. They are cutting some unusually fine Richmond and Killarney for the Boston market.

Frank L. Budlong, of Auburn, has gone to California on a business trip.

The street faker made his appearance last week, with soft Brides and Bridesmaids.

A. D. Iorio has been granted permission by the Inspector of Buildings of this city to build an addition to his greenhouse at 149 Unit street; also to erect a storehouse in the rear.

A. Van Leeuwen, Sr., of the Flora and Pomona Nurseries, Crook's corner, Woonsocket, is already heavily booked for spring work in setting shrubs, vines and landscape gardening.

Charles F. Edgar, formerly of Philadelphia, is now with S. J. Reuter & Son, of Westerly.

At Macnair's "Sunshine Shop" there was a big run on violets October 10.

Frank J. Sullivan (Westminster Greenhouses) has several houses of fine chrysanthemums in his range at 1205 Westminster street.

Work is to be commenced in a few days on extensive new greenhouses at Rough Point, the handsome estate of Mrs. William B. Leeds, at Newport.

S. J. Reuter & Son, Westerly, are shipping many My Maryland roses to the Boston market.

William B. Hazard's window advertisement this week is a miniature automobile of immortelles of red, white and blue, with dolls for chauffeur and passengers, on the front of which is the card bearing the inscription: "Hazard's Prompt Delivery."

The pastors of the two French Catholic churches in this city recently announced from their pulpits that they will not allow caskets bearing flowers to be brought into their churches. They stated that they were opposed to the custom of floral tributes at funerals because of the disposition to overdo it. W. H. M.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

Business is improving each week as the season advances. A number of weddings have been booked for the latter part of October, and we anticipate a steady advance in demand. There is plenty of good stock thus far. Roses are first-class and carnations coming better each week, although there still is much room for improvement. Cosmos never was better. Lady Lenox is perfect; immense flowers and fine color. Chrysanthemums are now plentiful, especially the early whites. Dahlias are still coming in, for this section has not yet had killing frosts.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club met at the home of Adolphus Gude in Anacostia October 6. Almost the entire membership was present. John Guttman, a grower at Congress Heights; Adolph Minder, a grower on Bladensburg road, and Harry Roly, of Center market, were elected to membership.

The flower show committee reported progress and distributed tickets. The show will be held in the old Masonic Temple, corner of Ninth and F streets, N. W., November 12 to 15. W. F. Gude spoke regarding a scale for judging floral arrangements. The subject will be taken up at the next meeting.

A vase of Gladiolus America, sent by John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y., was on exhibition and Mr. Childs was given a vote of thanks. A letter from the former secretary, Charles McCauley, now located at Geneva, Ill., was read. He sent his best wishes.

At adjournment Mr. Gude invited the club to the basement, which was lavishly decorated with foliage from the nearby forest, with flags, bunting and the soft light of Japanese lanterns. Four long tables were spread with a bountiful repast, including fried chicken and such other delicacies as only Mrs. Gude can set before her guests. After justice had been done to the good things to eat, singing and story-telling was in order. Among those who contributed to the entertainment were Messrs. Diehn, Cooke, W. F. Gude, Gottenkoenig, Gordon, Eberly and Chausey, together with the Rosebud Quartette. It was a late hour when the host was surrounded by all hands singing "For he's a jolly good fellow," after which faces were turned toward the nation's capital.

The next regular meeting comes on election night, so it was decided to meet Tuesday evening, October 27, as the guest of Mr. Grillbortzer at Alexandria, Va.

Various Notes.

Vernon Ley has opened his store on Fourteenth street and is making a fine showing. He has a nice lot of ferns grown by his brother, Charles Ley, at Langdon, D. C.

Gude Bros. Co. has just completed housecleaning, and with the new decorations the store makes a fine appearance.

W. F. Gude made a flying trip to Philadelphia last week. O. O.

WORCESTER, MASS.

The annual exhibition and banquet of the Worcester County Horticultural Society took place on the afternoon of October 8, in Horticultural hall. The collection of fruit was exceptionally good and there were many exhibitors in the various lines.

President George Calvin Rice was master of the feast and the guests included E. H. Burlingame, president of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society; Gen. Charles W. Wood, Worcester; Will S. Smith, secretary of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society; George S. Ladd, Sturbridge; J. Lewis Ellsworth, Worcester, secretary of the state board of agriculture; R. H. Bownen, Providence, and J. K. Greene, all of whom spoke.

NEW ORLEANS.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society will hold its annual show in the early part of November, and intending exhibitors are working hard in preparation for the event, as competition is keen. The consequence will be that an unusually good selection will be shown, especially in chrysanthemums. It is probable that the Society of Southern Florists, an organization founded some two years ago, composed of florists of all the Gulf states, will hold its convention in this city during the local flower show, and that its floral exhibit will be held in connection with it.

PACIFIC COAST.

FREEWATER, ORE.—C. N. Weaver has purchased the ranch known as the Ira Berry place, consisting of twenty-six acres, and will grow flowers for the market.

MILTON, ORE.—C. D. Hobbs, for four years connected with the Milton Nurseries Co., of this city, in charge of the sales accounts, but for the past few months a resident of McMinnville, has arrived to fill his old position with the nursery company during the fall and winter. S. A. Miller, president of the company, says that never in the history of the firm has business been so brisk as it is this season and that every available bit of help is being utilized.

WM. S. SIBSON, of the Sibson Rose Nurseries, Portland, Ore., is contributing to the Portland Oregonian a series of illustrated articles on roses which are a credit to himself and to that journal, and which cannot help but extend the popularity of roses in Portland, already known as the Rose City. A recent article recounts the awarding of the Nickerson prizes in England and the competition in France which E. G. Hill helped judge last June, and in which Rhea Reid subsequently won highest honors. Mr. Sibson makes skillful use of these events to point out how well Portland's favorite roses, Mme. Caroline Testout and Mme. Alfred Carriere, stood in the opinion of the world's leading rosarians and to describe other and newer sorts that scored so high as to make them seem desirable for trial.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business seems to be slowly improving and is about equal to that of one year ago. Funeral orders have constituted the largest part of the trade, but the demand for other flowers is good also. Chrysanthemums are now at their height and great quantities of outside grown stock are being used. The prices range from about $1 to $2.50 per hundred, while inside stock sells at about the same prices per dozen.

Asters are completely out of season, as are also amaryllis and Japan lilies. Carnations are daily becoming more plentiful than they have been, and the stems are of better length as the season advances.

Roses, with the exception of short-stemmed stock, are not very plentiful, but some growers are fortunate enough to have quite a quantity of fancy stock on hand.

Valley is coming into town in fair quantity and is selling better than it has at any time during the season. Violets, owing to the continued dry weather, are not up to form or color. They cost the stores about 75 cents per dozen.

Cosmos have made their appearance and are being used in large quantities when a cheap decorative effect is desired. Gladioli and dahlias are much scarcer. Sweet peas, owing to the coolness of the nights, are becoming very short of stem and we can see their finish in a few weeks. Cut asparagus is not so plentiful as we would like to see it. Smilax is much better than that of a week ago; $1 per dozen is the price the retailers pay.

Various Notes.

The Thorsted Co., of Fruitvale, opened its retail store in Oakland last week.

The firms handling fall bulbs in town claim they are of rather slow sale. The buying public is apparently waiting for a few showers to soften the ground.

George Holmes has left for Portland, Ore., to be absent from town about a month.

VICTORIA, B. C.

The week ending September 26 was fair week. Owing to an exceptional spell of fine weather, exhibits were numerous and good. Almost three times as many entries in the floral department were received as in the last season. Flewin's Gardens were the principal trade exhibitors and carried off most of the prizes. exhibitors were badly crowded, owing to lack of room. A table of sweet peas was most excellent and flowers staged on Tuesday morning were in perfect condition on Saturday evening. This speaks volumes for the exhibiting capacity of the new building, which takes the place of the old one burned down last summer.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.—The Battery Park Greenhouses, which for several months have been conducted by D. A. Lashley, have now been leased by the managers of the Battery Park hotel. The hotel company will remodel and improve the houses, and expects hereafter to furnish its own decorations, both for the interior and for the lawns, besides growing cut flowers for the market.

Stock is none too plentiful, as is usual at this time of the year. Some good Beauties are seen occasionally. Robert Klagge is shipping in some fine valley. The roses are good, what there are of them. Price ranges from 3 cents to 8 cents. Carnations are not plentiful and the quality is not any too good. The stems of most of the stock are weak. The best are bringing 3 cents. Chrysanthemums are in good supply. So far the flowers have not been large. Among the varieties seen are Monrovia, October Frost, Amorita, Kalb, Pacific, Bergmann and Midge. Cosmos is coming along nicely. Green of all kinds is plentiful.

Club Meeting.

The meeting of the Florists' Club was held in the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, where an elaborate lunch was served by the entertainment committee. The attendance was not so large as might have been expected, but nothing went begging.

Most of the evening was taken up with the discussion of the revised by-laws. These are now in the hands of the printer and will be ready by next meeting.

Acting upon a suggestion by John Dunn, a committee of three, consisting of J. F. Sullivan, Wm. Dilger and Robert Flowerday, was appointed to wait upon the city boiler inspector. This latter gentleman has just commenced to enforce an old ordinance requiring second engineer's papers to be held by firemen where over twelve pounds pressure ball bugs and the noisiest ever. The day the Detroit Tigers took the pennant from the White Sox, people in this city nearly went wild. Now that the big race is on, most of the merchants have appropriate window trimmings. Some of the florists also got in line. Sullivan displayed a large banner in yellow and black, made of immortelles. They also disposed of a great many yellow mums at a good price. Breitmeyer's windows were trimmed in the Tiger colors. Schroeter's also displayed the yellow and black in various ways. Bomb Floral Co. went so far as to decorate their rig in the colors. Thomas Browne and Robert Rahaley took a peep at Mt. Clemens one day last week. They say stock in general looked promising. Violets were the only flowers that were still far back. At Breitmeyer's the Beauties were exceptionally fine.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.
Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

THE farmers still are buying fruit trees, but the orders almost all include some ornamentals.

C. J. BROWN, of Brown Bros. Co., Rochester, and president of the American Association of Nurserymen, has returned from a European trip.

THE tree business in the west this fall is reported as more active than in the east, where the large landscape jobs are slow in developing into orders.

THE nurseries now nearly all, if they handle anything besides fruit trees, have a line of hardy herbaceous stock and find good profit in it. Phlox is one of the best selling items.

BENJAMIN CHASE, Derry, N. H., has been called to southern California, where Mrs. Chase, who is visiting a married daughter, has been taken ill and must undergo an immediate surgical operation.

THE tariff committee of the American Association of Nurserymen is preparing to put in its oar when the victorious political party undertakes the revision of the tariff in the next congress. Irving Rouse, of Rochester, is chairman.

THERE are now 160,000 acres of planted trees in central Kansas, where at one time it was thought that trees could not be grown. As the area in which agricultural crops can be profitably grown is steadily extending, so the limit of forest planting and tree culture is widening always.

IN the municipal court of Rochester, N. Y., recently, there was called before Judge Murphy the case of the Charlton Nursery Co. against Levi C. Weir, as president of the Adams Express Co. The nursery people had asked $25 damages for goods alleged to have been damaged during shipment. Judgment for $30.69 was taken by default. The case will probably be appealed.

CORPORATIONS and private citizens throughout New England are beginning to realize the opportunities which this region offers for profitable forest planting. This year about 2,500 acres have been planted in the six New England states by private citizens. In addition, a number of water companies have adopted a forest policy. The largest plantation of this character, which comprises over 1,000 acres, belongs to the Metropolitan Water and Sewerage Board of Clinton, Mass.

OLMSTED'S WAY.

Fred L. Olmsted, the landscape architect, has been down at New Haven remodeling or relaying the main college campus, and as a result Yale men say that one can actually get lost on it. Ancient paths have been ruthlessly ploughed up and sown with grass seed and new paths have been laid out which look strange to the sons of Eli. The Yale authorities have for a long time sighed for greenswards on the campus and have spent large sums of money urging Yale men "to keep off the grass." Olmsted was sent for this summer, and he said: "One way to preserve grass is to lay paths where people want to go. You can ascertain this by studying the paths worn on the sod that was. Make these paths official and dig up the ones laid out." That has been done. The theory will now receive demonstration.

HAWKES' IDAHO NURSERY.

It is stated at Springfield, Mass., that Rev. W. S. Hawkes, formerly of the American International College in that city, is pleasantly located at Caldwell, Idaho, where with his sons he is successfully conducting a large nursery business under the name of the Hawkes Nurseries. Mr. Hawkes is vice-president and treasurer of the Hawkes Investment Co.; Albert S. Hawkes is president; fine Jonathan apples on their Roswell ranch this year, as well as thirty other varieties, and last year they took over $1,200 worth of apples off seven acres of orchard. They have 40,000 apple trees in their nurseries this year, besides other varieties of fruit and ornamental trees.

Mr. Hawkes is pleasantly remembered in Springfield and at South Hadley Falls, where he was pastor of the Congregational church for some years in the '80s. Before moving to Springfield he was superintendent of the Congregational home missions in Utah and Idaho. Returning to Idaho, he formed the corporation above referred to, and with his three sons evidently has a good working organization.

able extent, most of the catalogue houses depending on the imported stock, although home-grown stock is better, as several of the large New York firms grow the plants from cuttings. These are usually made in May and June from the young wood. The cuttings taken from plants started in greenhouses root more readily than those taken from outdoor.

In taking a glance through a number of catalogues, it is noticed that the Europeans are far ahead of us in the number of varieties and classes listed, some of the leading firms listing as many as fifty to eighty or more varieties, while our American firms are satisfied with from six to twelve. Is it because we are less enterprising?

Not having followed this line of plants continuously, I should like to leave other details to experts in this field. But there is no reason why the same advance which has been made in roses, carnations, gladioli and cannas may not also be made in the clematis family, and we hope that some of our American hybridizers will take advantage of the opportunity here offered, as there is unlimited room for the development of this most useful and ornamental family of climbers.

Lonicera.

The lonicera family of hardy climbers is very popular, few plants emitting a more delightful fragrance than some of the varieties in this class. "As sweet as a honeysuckle" is an old-time expression.

Some of the newer varieties, notably Heckrotti and Hendersoni, are especially adapted for pot culture and easily forced. In the open field they produce continuous blooms from June to November. At this writing the young plants in the field are a mass of bloom, and a bouquet of their graceful sprays is always pleasing and is a delightful change at this season.

All the varieties of honeysuckle are of easiest propagation. Heckrotti and Hendersoni, and the varieties generally catalogued as red and yellow coral, and all European varieties, I prefer to propagate from hard wood under glass. The cuttings are planted on an open bench in a cool greenhouse in January. One eye cuttings are used when the joints are long. In spring they are planted in the field; potting is not necessary. During an average season they grow from two to four feet or more and bloom freely in a few months after they are planted.

All varieties of honeysuckle also root freely from green wood cuttings, made during the summer, in June and July, from young, growing wood, and we grow nearly all varieties in that manner. We plant the cuttings on open benches in the greenhouse, where they root in a few weeks. After they are rooted we pot them into 3½-inch or 4-inch pots, from four to six plants in a pot, and place them in beds outside in September and October, where they remain until planting time the following spring, which should be as early as possible, for a few warm April days start them into growth. Propagators pursue the methods best adapted to the different localities.

In the Japan section, Lonicera erachypoda is becoming a real pest, as it roots freely from every shoot touching the ground. Birds are also carrying the seeds and where it becomes firmly established it is difficult to exterminate it.

The type catalogued as Halliana has generally superseded the above named, as it is more desirable in every respect.

Ampelopsis Veitchii.

That ever useful climber, Ampelopsis Veitchii, is so well known that it requires no description. It is of easiest propagation. Seeds sown in March or April germinate in a few weeks, when they can be potted singly in 2½-inch pots, and if shifted into 4-inch and staked, will make nice plants by October. The pot-grown plants have the advantage over the field stock for decorative foliage. I have noticed that they color up finer under glass, as the grower has them under better control.

Varieties of the type, like Robusta and Roylei and others, require to be propagated from cuttings. These root easily in summer from green wood, but I prefer to make them from hard wood cuttings in winter.

Ampelopsis quinquefolia, our native American species, is useful in cold climates, owing to its extreme hardiness. Easily increased from seed.

Akebia Quinata.

This graceful Japanese climber, Akebia quinata, seemed to be more common forty years ago, and deserves more attention than it receives. Besides its fragrant, chocolate-colored, sweet-scented flowers, it is free from all insect pests and diseases. The easiest way to propagate is from the seed, but it also roots freely from cuttings from the young wood in June and July. It will also root from the mature wood in fall, but requires a longer time.

Celastrus Scandens.

It has always been a surprise to me that the beautiful native climber, Celastrus scandens, is not more popular. It has fine, glossy foliage, and in autumn its orange seedpods are charming. It is grown from seed. There are great variations, and to perpetuate the best fruiting strains they should be root grafted. There is plenty of room to work up this breed and show them pot grown for the Thanksgiving and Christmas trade.

It seems to me that there is always room for fine berried plants, and few plants are more attractive than these when full of their charming seed berries.

ERIE, PA.

The Market.

The weather is getting colder and fires must be carefully watched at night. Violets have not made their appearance in this section yet, but many inquiries are heard concerning them and it will not be long until the local growers can supply them. The outdoor flowers are over with, excepting late cosmos. The demand for asters has been large this year. Chrysanthemums are seen in the stores, although diminutive in size. The yellow and white ones are pretty fair. With the prospect of good violets, fancy carnations, orchids, roses and valley, what more can the retailer wish for this winter?

Various Notes.

A number of beautiful floral designs were seen at the W. W. Michener funeral this week. Although the family issued the request, "Please omit flowers," there was never a more choice collection seen in Erie. Designs were sent from New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but the work of the local florists compared well with that shipped in by friends at a distance.

The residence of Carl O. Neuberger and a section of the greenhouses of Mrs. M. Neuberger, 1147 West Sixth street, were destroyed by fire October 1. A defective boiler was the cause of the fire, which started at 1:30 a. m. The total loss was about $4,000.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Of weddings there is no end and much marrying maketh the decorator's heart glad. I have previously noted the mixed weather conditions of this year, and now it appears that October has taken snap judgment on June and appropriated both its weather and its weddings. The largest part of the business of last week came from wedding decorations, some stores having three or four on one day. For this purpose the white chrysanthemum answered admirably. Polly Rose, Glory of the Pacific and other early varieties are now in good supply and are selling well.

There is a great improvement in the quality of carnations. From present indications, Enchantress and Pink Enchantress will be even farther in the lead this year than they were last. It seems as though they are in a class by themselves and if they have any competitors they have not appeared here.

Roses are getting into winter form, something choice in American Beauties being seen. All the other sorts continue to improve. There was a heavy demand for white and red roses October 10, as that was the day that Cardinal Gibbons, archbishop of Baltimore, reached the city from his trip to Europe. There were thousands of flowers carried in the procession, which numbered about 10,000 marchers.

Various Notes.

William O. Stran has opened a store at the corner of Broadway and Monument street, just opposite Johns Hopkins hospital.

Mathias Thau has bought the property formerly occupied by the Fernery, which had greenhouses at Govanstown and a store on North Charles street.

William Snyder, gardener for Alexander Brown, on Park Heights avenue, has been out west on a visit to relatives. He is expected home October 15.

J. Guille, of the Hubert Bulb Co., Portsmouth, Va., gave a talk on home grown bulbs at the Florists' Club's meeting October 12.

Prepare for Thanksgiving and the Holidays.

Always the best is my endeavor,
Godfrey Aschmann must not be beat;
Here and in Europe, all know that I never
Will buy the poor trash they sell on the street.
I've just had a lot sent over the ocean,
The finest azaleas that ever were grown.
My ferns and my palms, I have a strong notion

We lead the country in Araucarias. Have been in the lead in the past; have it now and shall lead in the future.

We have houses full of choice Excelsa robusta
compacta and Excelsa glauca; enough to supply the entire country.

Will you pay 50 per cent to 100 per cent more
by buying from others who are not specialists?
Hope not; the wise are on guard. We are going to sell all of them and without drummers. By jingo, we must sell them; an elephant for 40c, 50c and 60c; a jumbo for 75c to $1.00; and a holy terror in size for $1.25 to $1.50.

Room! Room!!

We must have room for our great importation of azaleas, palms etc. Everything has to go at crackerjack prices. We are all seeking for great shows. It is nature. The greatest show on earth, The Founders' Week of Philadelphia, which has just closed with such brilliancy that whoever witnessed this unique affair will begin life with more strength, more courage and more confidence in the great American flag, which was so conspicuous in the great street parade of Friday, October 9. This flag shall be my flag, in which I trust my business and welfare now and forever more.

That all florists who see will make same their own.
While the fair araucaria cannot fail to delight.
Thanksgiving and Christmas will see them
just right;
So come, get together and make up the buyer,
If you don't boost the world, it will never rise higher.

Now is the time for floral exhibitio's.
Come and look at the show which we are now displaying at our greenhouses, in the rear of 1012 West Ontario Street and Thayer Street. A full, whole square, from Tenth to Eleventh Street.
is occupied, which is now filled with cases of plants, azaleas, palms, etc., just arrived on steamer Manitou, from Antwerp, Belgium.

TAKE NOTICE!

Plants have grown considerably and are now fully 10 per cent to 20 per cent bigger than advertised below.

Four houses full of choice Boston, Whit-mani and Scottii Ferns, 5, 5½, 6 and 7-in., all pot-grown, raised in sunny houses (not white-washed), which will produce stiff fronds; never were so fine as this year. Next on the program we carry a fine stock of choice Kentia Palms, Rubbers, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, etc., which stand a challenge with those of all the notable growers of America and Europe.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5-in. pots, 2 years old,
3 tiers, 10 to 12 inches high, 40c; 5½-in. pots, 2

The Market.

On weddings there is no end and much marrying maketh the decorator's heart glad. I have previously noted the mixed weather conditions of this year, and now it appears that October has taken snap judgment on June and appropriated both its weather and its weddings. The largest part of the business of last week came from wedding decorations, some stores having three or four on one day. For this purpose the white chrysanthemum answered admirably. Polly Rose, Glory of the Pacific and other early varieties are now in good supply and are selling well.

There is a great improvement in the quality of carnations. From present indications, Enchantress and Pink Enchantress will be even farther in the lead this year than they were last. It seems as though they are in a class by themselves and if they have any competitors they have not appeared here.

Roses are getting into winter form, something choice in American Beauties being seen. All the other sorts continue to improve. There was a heavy demand for white and red roses October 10, as that was the day that Cardinal Gibbons, archbishop of Baltimore, reached the city from his trip to Europe. There were thousands of flowers carried in the procession, which numbered about 10,000 marchers.

Various Notes.

William O. Stran has opened a store at the corner of Broadway and Monument street just opposite Johns Hopkins hospital.

Mathias Than has bought the property formerly occupied by the Fernery, which had greenhouses at Govanstown and a store on North Charles street.

William Snyder, gardener for Alexander Brown, on Park Heights avenue, has been out west on a visit to relatives. He is expected home October 15.

J. Guille, of the Hubert Bulb Co., Portsmouth, Va., gave a talk on home grown bulbs at the Florists' Club's meeting October 12.

Prepare for Thanksgiving and the Holidays.

Always the best is my endeavor,
Godfrey Aschmann must not be beat;
Here and in Europe, all know that I never
Will buy the poor trash they sell on the street.
I've just had a lot sent over the ocean,
The finest azaleas that ever were grown.
My ferns and my palms, I have a strong notion

We lead the country in Araucarias. Have been in the lead in the past; have it now and shall lead in the future.

We have houses full of choice Excelsa robusta
compacta and Excelsa glauca; enough to supply the entire country.

Will you pay 50 per cent to 100 per cent more
by buying from others who are not specialists?
Hope not; the wise are on guard. We are going to sell all of them and without drummers. By
jingo, we must sell them; an elephant for 40c, 50c and 60c; a jumbo for 75c to $1.00; and a holy terror in size for $1.25 to $1.50.

Room! Room!!

We must have room for our great importation of azaleas, palms etc. Everything has to go at crackerjack prices. We are all seeking for great shows. It is nature. The greatest show on earth, The Founders' Week of Philadelphia, which has just closed with such brilliancy that whoever witnessed this unique affair will begin life with more strength, more courage and more confidence in the great American flag, which was so conspicuous in the great street parade of Friday, October 9. This flag shall be my flag, in which I trust my business and welfare now and forever more

That all florists who see will make same their own.
While the fair araucaria cannot fail to delight,
Thanksgiving and Christmas will see them
just right;
So come, get together and make up the buyer.
If you don't boost the world, it will never rise higher.

Now is the time for floral exhibitio-
s. Come and look at the show which we are now displaying at our greenhouses, in the rear of 1012 West Ontario Street and Thayer Street. A full, whole square, from Tenth to Eleventh Street, is occupied, which is now filled with cases of plants, azaleas, palms, etc., just arrived on steamer Manitou, from Antwerp, Belgium.

TAKE NOTICE!

Plants have grown considerably and are now fully 10 per cent to 20 per cent bigger than advertised below.

Four houses full of choice Boston, Whit- mani and Scottii Ferns, 5, 5½, 6 and 7-in., all pot-grown, raised in sunny houses (not white-washed), which will produce stiff fronds; never were so fine as this year. Next on the program
we carry a fine stock of choice Kentia Palms, Rubbers, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, etc.
which stand a challenge with those of all the notable growers of America and Europe.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5-in. pots, 2 years old,
3 tiers, 10 to 12 inches high, 40c; 5½-in. pots, 2

DAYTON, OHIO.

The Market.

We have some better conditions than we were able to quote in our last report. Trade up until Saturday, October 3, was nothing to brag of, and most of our florists were in hope that something would turn up to bring about more business. On Monday, October 5, prospects brightened and business commenced to boom, and the prices also advanced a little, for the supply of stock, being limited, was insufficient to compete with the demand. The wholesale dealers were receiving orders from customers who for three or four weeks had apparently been dead, and as a result could not find enough stock to fill all the orders received. These conditions held true during the entire week and at the present time still continue. If stock were only more plentiful the florist surely would have a good harvest.

Carnations are doing well, considering the time of the year, and the crop at the present time is heavier than a year ago. The blooms are fine and the stems are getting to be of good length, while the wholesaler realizes $3 per hundred for most of them. Bride and Maid just now are off crop, while Kaiserin and Carnot are fine and are used in a good many cases as substitutes. Lilies are as good as ever and sell readily, and the weather is just the kind a florist likes.

Various Notes.

Miss Gussie Mernitz, of Chicago, has been a guest at the home of George Bartholomew for a week.

H. H. Ritter had a large wedding decoration for October 12.

The merchants of Dayton gave a fall carnival October 8 to 10, and one of the most attractive booths was that of J. B. Heiss. R. A. B.

Mushrooms—How to Grow Them.

By WM. FALCONER. This is the most practical work on the subject ever written, and the only book on growing mushrooms published in America. The author describes how he grows mushrooms and how they are grown for profit by the leading market gardeners, and for home use by the most successful private growers. Engravings drawn from nature expressly for this work. Cloth. $1.00

The Pruning Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth. 630 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

A Visit to Will.

October 8 O. A. Will, in his powerful car, called at the stores of Rice Bros., O. Swanson and James Souden & Co., and took us for a ride out on the boulevard to inspect the greenhouses of Will Bros. Knowing the record of the machine, we all took precaution to see that our life insurance policies were paid up, but we arrived at the plant all safe.

This place consists of twenty-one houses, comprising nearly 200,000 square feet of glass. We first entered the violet section, where Princess of Wales is grown. Three large houses are devoted to these, and they are all in splendid condition and promise a great crop of blooms a little later on. From here we entered the first section of the carnation range, where Victory and Winsor are in splendid condition. From here we passed into the packing-room and cooling cellars, down the long cement walks to range No. 2, where White Perfection and Enchantress are grown in quantity, and every plant, laden with a profusion of buds, seems the picture of health. Next we are taken to range No. 3, comprising seven 300-foot houses, which are probably as well built houses as are to be seen anywhere in the country today. Three houses in this range are devoted to carnations. The varieties grown are Winsor, Lawson and Enchantress, and such vigor and uniform growth I have never before seen in a carnation range, for every plant shows the hand of a careful grower. Next we were taken to the rose section, where Chatenay, Bride, Richmond and Killarney are grown, and they were all in splendid shape, especially the Killarney. A house of Kaiserin is still producing splendid flowers on long stems. Next was the chrysanthemum house. One large 300-foot house is given over to this crop, and no finer house of these can be seen anywhere. The greater portion are grown on single stems. In a large house of double violets, every plant is in splendid condition. In the immense boiler-room are four large boilers of 500 horse-power, to supply the heat and power for this entire plant. In connection with this is a large concrete coal house, which is already nearly filled with over a thousand tons of coal. In connection with the pump-room is the sterilizing plant, where all the manures are strained and put on by the use of steam pumps.

As one looks over the entire place and

Girvin's Handy Cutter

Mr. Florist, if you once get one of these cutters on your finger you will never be without it for many times the price. Just the thing for cutting your carnations, sweet peas, asters, melons, grapes, etc. Why be bothered with a knife or follow the old way of breaking your flowers when a Handy Cutter will do the work better and save you money and time? Don't continue breaking your carnations and thus ruin hundreds of young shoots daily, simply because a knife is unhandy to work with, but try a Handy Cutter. If you are not entirely satisfied with it you can return it and have your money refunded. These cutters are made of spring brass, highly nickel-plated, and contain a removable blade.

notes the system and cleanliness, he can see that no expense has been spared in producing high quality of flowers, and the fine condition of everything on the place makes it well worth one's going a long way to see. After satisfying the inner man, we were all landed safely in our respective stores.

RANGE ON A HILLSIDE.

I wish to inquire about the piping of a new house, which I will designate as house No. 1. It is 18x100, with side walls four and a half feet high. It is built on a hillside, sloping two feet from the upper side of the house to the lower side. The boiler will be more than fifty feet farther down the hillside, as I am planning to build three more houses, Nos. 2, 3 and 4, between house No. 1 and the boiler. Thus the bottom of the boiler will be at least sixteen feet below the level of the highest point of the flow pipe in house No. 1, which is the only house concerned in this inquiry.

I wish to use no pipe above 2-inch size for the flows. The expansion tank will be about two feet above the highest point of the flow, and I can place the tank still higher if necessary. What size of pipe will be best for the returns, and how many will be required to heat the house for common, mixed bedding stock? I should prefer to use 1½-inch or 1¼-inch pipe. Where would it be best to connect to the expansion tank—at the highest point of the return, or should I run a pipe back to a point near the boiler? I have plenty of boiler capacity.

Which is better—to slope the house away from the workroom, so as to allow the water to flow in the gutter to the back end, or to slope it toward the workroom and lead the water away in pipes? How much fall is necessary?

The space to be covered by the proposed houses, Nos. 2, 3 and 4, is now occupied by two detached greenhouses, which will later be removed, and connected houses will be built, with separate flows running from the boiler to each house. The workroom extends the whole length and at house No. 1 will be two stories high, for the expansion tank. If I attach the expansion pipe close to the boiler, I must have a pipe about fifty-five feet longer than would otherwise be required, but I would do this in case the system would be better.

E. B.

You do not mention the locality in which you are working, so I can only state what would apply for conditions in the latitude of Chicago. To maintain a temperature of 55 degrees in house No. 1 with hot water at 180 degrees, during cold weather, it will require at least twelve returns the length of the house, if you use 1½-inch pipe, which is as small as is safe for a house of this length.

With the boiler located as you have planned, if the houses are eighteen feet wide, it will make a long run from the boiler to the far end of house No. 1; in fact, a distance too great to hope for best results from hot water, unless you use heavy pressure or a circulating pump. However, you may find that it will work well with an expansion tank located ten or twelve feet above the highest pipe in the system. My preference is for an independent connection for the expansion tank close to the boiler, but you may find the plan you suggest of connecting to the highest point in the main return satisfactory. If it does not prove so, run an independent pipe and connect with the main return near the boiler. I think you will find it better to carry water away from the workroom rather than toward it. Four inches in 100 feet will be ample fall for the gutter. L. C. C.

A SHALLOW BOILER PIT.

I have my house ready for the pipes and should like your opinion. The house runs east and west and is 18x100 feet, eleven feet to the ridge and four and a half feet high at the sides, with eighteen inches of glass in the south side. I am thinking of putting in one 2-inch flow and five 2-inch returns on each side, as I have no benches. Or would it be better to put in one 3-inch flow under the ridge and five 2-inch returns on each side? With the expansion tank

What Kind of Boiler Have You?

This question is a mighty important one, because with some kinds of boilers there is the ever present contingency of explosion and damage.

With a steel boiler the Florist will always have this possibility upon his mind; that is, if he realizes that a steel boiler is liable to explode any minute.

Capitol Boilers are made of cast iron, made with divided sections. Each section is in itself a small boiler, with its own internal circulation. If by any accident any section breaks down it can be removed for repair or replaced with a new section, and all the while the utility of the boiler itself is not interfered with. Capitol Boilers can not under any circumstances explode.

Capitol Boilers are most economical in fuel, and are easy to operate.

Capitol Boilers are the best boiler in the world for the Florist.

I intend to use a Wilks boiler, 30x42. Will that be large enough? I am located in northern Kentucky and should like 55 degrees in zero weather. We cannot go into the ground more than two feet, but by using a closed tank I think I ought to get good circulation. G. O. K.

If you cannot put the top of the boiler below the level of the returns on the sides, then you will get best results by using the single overhead flow—the 3-inch flow. The only way to increase the pressure in your system is by elevating the expansion tank. Connect the tank with the main return close to the boiler and place the tank twelve or fifteen feet above the highest pipe in the house. This will give you eight or ten pounds of pressure; thirty-three feet will give fifteen pounds. I would not advise the use of 1½-inch pipes for hot water on 100-foot runs; 2-inch will be all right. The next larger size of boiler would be better. A 30x42 is rated to carry 600 to 700 feet. You have a little over 600 feet, which is a full load for the boiler. L. C. C.

PIPING IN OHIO.

Please instruct me how to pipe my greenhouse, 12x50 feet, four feet to the plate and seven feet to the ridge, and containing two benches. I have an upright boiler, three feet in diameter and six feet high, with one 10-inch flue through the center. The grate is thirty inches in diameter. The boiler has a 1½-inch hole in the top and a 2-inch hole at the bottom. I should like to use 1½-inch or 2-inch pipe.

Please state how much the bottom of the boiler should be below the level of the house floor, as I wish to keep it as high as possible. How high should the tank be above the top of the boiler? What size should the tank be? Will the same boiler heat one more house of the same size as the present one? T. F.

Your house should have eight lines of 2-inch pipe in it to maintain a temperature for carnations. This will serve best if installed so as to place four lines of pipe under the bench on the most ex-work all right. The expansion tank should connect with the main return near the boiler and be at least ten feet higher than the highest point in the house piping. A 50-gallon tank should be ample for this plant at the height mentioned. I am sorry to say I cannot state what the heating capacity of this boiler may prove to be. It is one seldom used for such work and is of the least economical type. L. C. C.

A MUSHROOM HOUSE.

I have a Wilks boiler, No. 36, with a 1½-inch opening. Will one run of 1½-inch pipe, placed at both sides and at the ends, be enough for a mushroom house 12x40, and six feet four inches high, here in northwestern Pennsylvania? Will the expansion tank work satisfactorily if placed right above the boiler, and will an 8-gallon tank be large enough? J. T. T.

No; such a building will require at least a 2-inch flow, but this can be fed from the 1½-inch opening in the boiler by using a filling to reduce from two to one and one-half inches, using only a close nipple in the boiler. You should have a 50-gallon expansion tank, connected with the main return close to the boiler by a small pipe, say ¾-inch, and the tank should be elevated eight or ten feet above the highest point in the system. L. C. C.

The Market.

There was a decided rush for all kinds of stock last week and each day found everything cleaned up. Carnations are in great demand, it being impossible to fill all orders for them. The cut of roses has decreased with the arrival of cold weather, but there are enough for all, at a slight rise in prices. Mums are coming in freely, but there are not enough to supply the demand. Some few cosmos are to be had at $1.50 per hundred. Dahlias are poor and scarce. Valley is coming in finely, at $4 per hundred.

Quantities of good Beauties are received daily and are selling well at from $1 to $3 per dozen.

Various Notes.

The J. M. Gasser Co. showed some good mums in its store window last week. A window of violets was also attractive.

Lars Anderson, of Rocky River, is sending in a fine cut of Enechantress, as well as other good carnations.

F. H. Kramer, of Rocky River, is cutting some extra fine T. W. Lawson for so early in the season. They were planted from pots early in June.

C. A. Bramley, of Superior avenue, has been holding sales of Boston ferns and reports having moved large quantities.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

The nights for the last few weeks have been cold, with a few frosts. The neighboring towns on the east have had hard frosts. All bedding stock is damaged and only such stock as salvia and other late stock is standing the cool nights.

Outdoor cosmos is just beginning to flower; the same is true of dahlias, but the season is too short to get a good supply of either. Splendid cosmos is shipped in from the east and sells on sight. Dahlias are also good, but the shipping is too much for them. A slight bruise and your flower is unsalable. Notwithstanding the splendid packing by the Atco shippers, the soft varieties show the journey, and if stock is not sold shortly after arrival, it is worthless.

Early mums have arrived and there was a wild scramble for the first stock. Fall weddings called for mums and everyone wanted them on arrival. The result was a good price for the grower. Each day brought out the stock and now you can have any color you may choose. Violets are improving fast and a number were sold for the big football game Saturday.

Various Notes.

The committee for arranging the flower show to be held by the Buffalo Florists' Club held a meeting on Monday last, at Lancaster, N. Y. Mr. Palmer, being on the said committee, invited the gentlemen to hold the meeting at his office, and also to see his new range of glass.

Mr. Gilman, one of the large violet growers of the east, visited Buffalo last week on a fishing trip.

S. A. Anderson had one of the largest decorations seen in years. E. R. Thomas, of the New York to Paris fame, spent the coin, so no expense was spared. The job was complete in every detail and the work was highly praised by the papers.

J. Rowland Cloudsley, manager of the Lenox Flower Shop, reports business as good in his new store. He made his window very attractive last week by arranging a football field, with all the side issues.

Joe Streit has again succeeded in getting a fine stock of begonias for the fall trade. He has a few under lock and key, in the begonia line, which he hopes to be winners. Making a study of them as he does, he is bound to make something of them.

Fall planting is being done extensively just now. George McClure & Son are at present planting large jobs.

Something About Roses in U-Bar Houses

Time and again gardeners have told us that they have less trouble with their roses when grown in a U-Bar house. Mildew more easily prevented and all that sort of thing.

Whether this is because of the increased lightness, the under-bench ventilation or the perfect system of heating, we are not wise enough to say, but suspect all three have to do with it. However, the fact is established, as results have proven, and results are what you want a greenhouse for. Send for fully illustrated catalog and know why it is also the most enduring construction.

THE CASCADE WREATH.

The funeral of ex-President Grover Cleveland, at Princeton, N. J., was the occasion of one of the most elaborate displays of flowers ever seen in this country, and, of course, quality was the conspicuous characteristic of every piece; not one but was the best work of the man who made it, and the material was invariably the choicest that could be procured. It was to be expected that retailers making up work for such an event would seek to get away from the commonplace, but there was little that was really new. About the only real novelty was a cascade wreath, a wreath made on a similar frame being shown in the accompanying illustration. William N. Reed, of Reed & Keller, New York, who originated the frame, says this was the first one sold.

The frame for the wreath is not dissimilar to the one used for an ordinary wreath, except that it is attached in a slanting position, the point of attachment being at the top and rear. The maker-up secures the shower effect by the proper selection and use of flowers. In the cascade wreath illustrated the shower was made of Sprenger with valley. The wreath itself was of asters and Kaiserin roses, the latter being used on that part where no valley was employed. The base of the frame is an oblong wedge-shape, designed to give the piece stability with the heavy wire support at one side only, and also to afford a flooring for the decoration, which should extend well out and up to meet the shower of flowers from above. If there were not close connection apparent the effect would be lost. The wreath and base are separate, so that each part can be made up and then the two put together.

SUGGESTIONS FOR WINDOWS.

Water Windows.

Of all the interesting and fascinating windows, both in regard to their construction and their results, none are more interesting and fascinating than water windows. Probably the motion and life about them account for the attraction which they possess.

The mechanical necessities for a successful water window have already been described, so we will take it for granted that we have as a starter a self-draining cement basin, with a faucet and hose connection. All dust and dirt removed, we are ready to deposit clean sand, gravel and rock, according to some one of a number of plans for this style of decoration.

A Fish Pond.

This time it will be a fish pond. Let us have about two-thirds of the space allotted to water. On one side we shall have a rather steep incline sloping toward the water, and on an opposite corner the beginning of a low stretch. If the window contains a mirror, let the space in front of it be mostly clear. On the low corner of the land boundary, set in a jar containing a group of some tall, slender stalks, like cat-tails, gladioli, dwarf sunflowers, Golden Glow, or something of that description. If the stalks are a little inclined to appear too around to anchor the jar and hide both it and the pot. It is well to remember that we are working now on the cement bottom, from six inches to a foot below the upper floor of the window, all the sections of the upper floor having been removed except one or two, which have been retained as a foundation for the inclined bank.

If space permits, set in a group of flowers or foliage to the rear, arranging in a manner similar to the first group in the corner. Let a large rock be placed somewhere conveniently, so that it will jut out boldly when the water is turned on.

Building the Hillside.

Now start in on building the hill on the opposite end of the window. The straight or stiff, place a slender plant of Boston fern, with long, drooping fronds, among the flower stalks. Do not let the receptacle be too deep, just enough to hold the stalks slightly together. Pile enough rocks and sand best material for covering the slope would be some kind of blooming plants, not too tall. Tip the pots on the side facing the water and pile up like a steep slope as high as the pots can be held together. Brace them from behind and pack damp sphagnum in between and behind them. When the hillside is finished, cover the top edges of the pots with fern leaves or other green, and plant a group of tall plants on the top of the hill. This hill need not be built from the cement bottom, but may start from the water line on a platform, which is most conveniently formed by using one or two sections of the regular window floor.

The Cascade Wreath.

After the hillside is completed, make the water connection, for which hose is more convenient than pipe, for it can be set in any spot. Lay it across the bottom of the basin and cover it with small stones and gravel. See that the drain is well screened and some stones piled around to prevent the material from being washed away. Turn on the water slowly and easily at first, so that there shall be no danger of floating any of the "land." After a few hours the water will clear itself, and the fish may take possession. This plan makes a good window for spring, with peach or other tree blossoms for the tall corner piece, and Azalea Vervæneana for the hillside. A few full-blown pink roses of a harmonizing tint may float on the water, while a fringe of valley appears from the remote boundary.

A Winding Stream.

Another: Build a narrow waterway, zigzagging the entire length of the window, with rocks and sand for the bed of a brook. Give it a gradual fall. If araucarias are plentiful, hide the source of the water with a little grove of them. Scatter low ferns along the front bank. On the opposite bank, next to the back of the window, plant a solid, thick border of Paper White, Von Sion or other variety of narcissus. If the bed of the brook is prettily laid out, there will be a bend or two in its course which will be noticeably brought out by the narcissus border. Let the water flow toward the mirror, to appear to lengthen its course.

A Waterfall.

A waterfall: As high as convenient at the back of the window, set up a pile of good sized rocks, over which the water may fall to a pool below. Increase the seeming height of the fall by a group of tall plants behind and among the rocks. Lay out the lower part of the window according to the season. If for the autumn, use dahlias, mums, golden-rod, Golden Glow, autumn branches, back from the water. If for spring, use Easter lilies, hyacinths, valley or other bulbs, growing close to or in the water. Plant some in groups and others scattering out toward another group.

GERTRUDE BLAIR.

A STORE OPENING.

The season of fall openings being now at hand, the accompanying illustration will be of special interest. It shows the store of Burt & Coggan, at Battle Creek, Mich., at the time of the opening early last autumn. The firm was then a new one, being composed of H. M. Burt, who had been in the business some time, and S. W. Coggan, who joined with Mr. Burt at the time the new Arcade building was completed and new quarters were occupied.

It will be apparent that the illustration is taken through the front show-window. As the store faces in the Arcade, the shadow which usually destroys the value of pictures taken through glass was avoided. The space shown is where the firm makes its display and does its selling. At the middle of the right-hand side an opening will be noticed which leads into the adjoining store, which is utilized for working purposes. Here all supplies are stored and all making-up is done.

On the day of the opening Burt & Coggan, having advertised the date, had more than 5,000 visitors, and each woman was given a fancy carnation, with the result that all over town that day people returning from the business center were decked out with flowers and the advertising value to the florists was far above the cost of the stock.

BABY'S PILLOW.

The accompanying illustration is one of the series of funeral designs by C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia. This arrangement of a baby's pillow is not carried out on conventional lines. The idea was to use baby flowers throughout, gardenias, lily of the valley, and sweet peas edging the white field of carnations. Pink sweet peas were used at the corners, adding a touch of color to relieve the coldness of the white flowers.

DAHLIAS FOR CUT FLOWERS.

There are many growers of dahlias who in their enthusiasm plant almost numberless varieties of the several types and consequently are disappointed, when the plants come into flower, because they are unable to cut a sufficient number of one distinct color or variety when it is desirable to make use of the blooms for indoor decoration.

There are a great many varieties on the market now, and this, I admit, makes the task of selection rather hard for any one not thoroughly up on dahlias, but it would be well for those, especially beginners, who intend to grow dahlias primarily for cut flower purposes, to make their own selections as far as possible from the results of their own observations. They would thereby make sure that they would have only what would be of some practical utility, instead of having a lot of stuff from which no profit could be derived. It is evident that the proper plan is to have a large enough number of each type and color to give flowers in sufficient quantity to meet all possible demands.

Of the three or four different types of dahlias now more or less extensively grown, I am inclined to think that the singles are, for general cut flower purposes, ahead of all the others. The cactus dahlias are without doubt beautiful and capable of being used with good effect in decorative work, but for large vases I do not take to them as readily as to the singles. The decorative dahlias, though on the whole somewhat heavy and stiff, include several varieties of exceptional merit for cut flower purposes, and this can be especially noted of Fire Rain and that favorite of Newport, Katherine Duer.

M.

SWEET PEAS.

I have a north and south house, 200 feet long, planted with chrysanthemums; one-half are midseason, the other half late varieties. They are in a ground bed, with from six to eight feet headroom. The bed is six feet wide. One-half will be ready November 15, the other half December 1. I wish to plant this house with sweet peas, and have the best of Zvolanek's and Burpee's winter blooming varieties ready in pots. Will you kindly give me some cultural instructions in your valuable paper?

C. M. A.

After your chrysanthemums are cut, give the bed a coating of two or three inches of well-rotted cow manure and spade it over thoroughly, getting the manure in the bottom of the trench each time. Your bed, being six feet wide, will not hold more than two rows of sweet peas. It will, of course, be much the better plan to run these the length rather than the breadth of the house. In planting, allow two or three inches between each individual plant and this will give you far better results than setting them thicker. The best plan is to have a single line of plants.

It would have been better could you have given your plants more headroom, as they will need it late in the winter. A night temperature of 45 degrees will suffice until buds appear, when 45 to 50 degrees should be given. Avoid all cold draughts. Fumigate every week, using light doses, to keep insects in check. Use the spray nozzle where there is any danger of red spider getting a foothold. A topdressing of bone flour worked into the soil, or some of the dried animal manures can be given with benefit towards spring.

THE READERS' CORNER.

A Hardy Hibiscus.

Your kindly answer to my question as to the hardiness of Hibiscus coccineus, stating that this is a tender plant except in the warmer southern states and will not winter in the open in Indiana, prompts me to make statement of the following facts, which may prove of interest to your readers.

Some twenty years ago I chanced to find a little seedling in a border devoted to native wild plants, where I had sown no seeds whatever. The following summer it gave me a wide open, single red flower, eight and a half inches across.

Seeds were saved and those sown that fall grew the following spring, but those carried over dry never germinated. The seedlings proved absolutely hardy and the plants have seeded themselves since, so that I have merely to hoe away what I do not want. We have had many winters running to 20 degrees below zero, but never has a plant been injured, though I do not give them the slightest protection. Compared with a color plate in an old magazine, they seem to be identical with Hibiscus coccineus. It seems certain, therefore, that I have a new hardy strain of this plant, which has proven one of the most valuable of my collection. At three years the plant throws four to six stems six to eight feet high, blooming profusely for six weeks.

I have no seeds or roots for sale, for I am now out of the business. If, however, the Editor will suggest a proper channel, I will assist in saving this plant from obscurity and possible extinction.

GARDENIAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

I have a few gardenias in pots and all set with flower buds. Could I manage to have these in flower before Christmas by keeping them in a temperature of about 65 degrees at night? J. M.

If your plants are well set with buds there is no reason why you should not get a good number of them in flower for Christmas. Maintain a night temperature of 65 to 68 degrees and give a spraying over once a day. An excess of water at the root will cause buds to drop quicker than dryness; therefore, use care in watering. If the buds seem a little backward when December comes, endeavor to raise the minimum temperature 5 degrees for a short time.

TO GET RID OF ANGLEWORMS.

Please give me some information in regard to angleworms, as there are many of them in my carnation beds. Do they hurt carnations, and if they do, what is the best way to get rid of them?

W. L. W.

The presence of angleworms in the soil is never desirable, and if in large numbers their presence is most objectionable. I cannot say just what they feed on. They do not, however, feed on the roots of the plants, like grubs and such. The damage they do is in changing the texture of the soil into a flat, sticky mass, which is unfit for plants to grow in. The best thing to get rid of them with is lime, which can be applied either in dry or liquid form. Sprinkle a handful of dry-slaked lime between each row of plants and water it into the soil. If the liquid is preferred, put a peck of fresh lime into a 50-gallon barrel of water. The next day take the liquid and water the beds with it. The angleworms will soon make themselves scarce.

THRIPS AND OTHER TROUBLES.

If you will kindly inform me as to the name of the disease on the enclosed carnations, with the cause and the remedy, the favor will be greatly appreciated.

F. M. L.

The most serious thing troubling your carnations, according to the specimens sent, is thrips. Those white spots on the petals, which showed in each bud and bloom, are always a sure sign of the presence of this most destructive of greenhouse pests. The cause of these spots is easy to tell, but the remedy is not easy, and the successful application of the remedy is still less easy.

It is a well-known fact that tobacco, or rather the nicotine in the tobacco, is most deadly to this insect, and whenever he is reached by it in any form his execution is a certainty. But to reach him—herein lies the difficulty. The eggs are deposited in well hidden places and the young pests work in between the closely folded petals of the buds, and how are you going to reach them with either liquid or fumes? Under present conditions it would seem that the only time to catch them is when they are necessarily exposed on account of the loosening of the petals and blades, as the bloom and the growth develop.

Some of our scientific friends, who are now busily engaged in studying these pests, may evolve some method of extermination which will be so effective and deadly to them that it will be possible to get every one of them to a certainty. If we could keep the atmosphere continually charged with something poisonous to them for one week, we could destroy every one of them. To do this without injuring the crop is the problem to be worked out, and it will be worth the price of its solution.

At present we depend entirely on tobacco and its products. These are dusted and sprayed on the plants, and, if applied with persistency, they will keep the pest in check quite effectively. Your efforts, however, must be accompanied by a great amount of perseverance and must be kept up continuously through the season. If you keep after them all through the winter you can have your plants so nearly clean that little damage will be done by them in the spring, at which time they usually do the most damage.

Do not be deceived into the belief that there are none present, if during the winter you do not see many of the spots on your blooms. During cool weather the punctures do not produce these spots so readily, and the thrips are not so active either. They are present, nevertheless, and toward spring, when warm weather sets in, they multiply at an enormous rate. A comparatively small number, if left unchecked, will overrun your place inside of a few weeks' time. By spraying your plants once each week during the winter, you can keep them down pretty well, but if you find them increasing you can increase the spraying to two or three times each week, or even oftener if deemed advisable. Dust the plants thoroughly and leave it on several days before washing it off, and repeat as often as considered necessary to get the upper hand.

One of the branches of Lawson showed a spot of that fungous disease which has attacked and practically ruined that variety on some places during the last few years. It seems to differ somewhat from the other spot diseases, in that it attacks the flower stems mostly. It should, however, yield to treatment with Bordeaux mixture and such fungicides. Only one branch showed this disease, and for that reason I am led to suspect that you were unaware of its presence. Better get busy with Bordeaux. You will find Grape Dust a splendid thing to dust over the plants for any of the spot diseases, and the steam pipes should also be painted with sulphur. Give all the ventilation possible and keep the temperature at the proper level at all times now, whether you have to fire up or not.

FALL PLANTING OF ROSES.

It is advisable, whenever possible, to plant hybrid perpetual roses in the fall of the year instead of in the spring.

In the fall or early winter the plants are dormant, and, when moved and planted, scarcely feel that they have been shifted. In early spring, therefore, they will push into vigorous growth, equaling in strength of wood and flower plants that had been established for years. And the certainty of securing good results from roses the first season after planting means a good deal to growers, especially to private gardeners, who in most cases would hear a good deal about it if the roses did not come fully up to expectations.

Spring planting is safe enough if the plants can be kept dormant until the time comes for planting, but altogether unsafe if the plants have started into growth before they reach the planter, as often happens when the plants are purchased in spring, from growers or dealers who are in localities of different conditions of climate and who do not keep their plants in cold storage.

It is utter folly to expect that hybrid perpetual roses will make anything at all of a show the first season if, when planted, they have already made two inches or more of growth. It is poor business policy for any house to continue to send out roses in such an advanced stage of growth, but there is proof that they have done so in the past, and that quite recently. I think it would be much better for intending planters to procure the plants in the fall or early winter and keep them heeled in, even if they are unable to plant them in their permanent quarters.

DOROTHY PERKINS ROSE.

A writer in the Gardeners' Magazine (London) says that Dorothy Perkins rose is unquestionably one of the finest of the rambling varieties, and it makes a fine companion for such splendid roses as Crimson Rambler and the newer single Hiawatha. "I have seen Dorothy Perkins used in a variety of ways, and while it is extremely beautiful when grown up a stout oak post, so as to provide a fountain of beauty and fragrance, I fancy it is never seen to better advantage than when it adorns a rustic arch. Its merits as a pot plant we all know full well, but the fullest freedom of growth and bloom are only to be seen when, planted in good soil, a plant or plants take possession of an arch. Ravenscourt Park, Hammersmith, is not an ideal rose district, for it is within the metropolitan area, but there are many good gardens in the district, and Mr. Gingell, the superintendent of Ravenscourt Park, always provides an excellent display. As a town rose Dorothy Perkins has unquestionably strong claims to attention from owners of gardens large enough to afford room for roses." In the accompanying illustration the rose surrounds a sun dial.

HARDY ROSE JOTTINGS.

Advantages of Fall Planting.

Too little attention is paid to the fall planting of not only roses, but many other shrubs and trees in America. The nurseries are simply overwhelmed with orders in spring and there are long and, to customers, vexatious delays in making shipments. The plants are often badly dried out before being planted, frequently get hot, dry weather after they are in the ground, and it is safe to hazard a guess that fifty per cent, on an average, either die at once or do not come through the first winter. Plants set out in spring produce, at best, but a few miserable, short-stemmed flowers; at least, such is the case with the hybrid perpetuals.

It is a thousand pities that more growers cannot be induced to try fall planting of hybrid roses. Set out at the end of October or beginning of November, they will winter well and give vastly superior blooms to spring planted stock. The nurseries would be only too glad to handle fall orders. It would somewhat lessen the spring pressure, and customers would receive fresh stock from the ground, whereas in spring a great proportion of the plants sent out are either from Europe or have been stored in sheds and cellars over winter.

Value of Budded Stock.

As between budded stock and that grown from cuttings, there can be no comparison; the latter is shorter lived, more easily winter-killed and makes a feeble growth.

A great quantity of hybrid perpetuals are annually handled in America, which have been produced in the low muck lands of Holland. These can be bought and sold cheaper than American or British roses. They are usually to be found in auction rooms and on dry goods counters. It has been truly said that these do more to discourage rose culture among the masses of the people than all other contributory causes combined.

Location and Drainage.

The best location for roses is considered by M. H. Walsh, a well-known rose expert, to be a southeast to southwest exposure, but I have noted little difference in the quality of blooms whether the site runs north and south or east and west. Protection from cold north winds is advantageous, if the protection is not of a nature to shut off air and sunlight. There will be less mildew on fully exposed plants than if the same are grown close to buildings.

Dorothy Perkins Rose and Sun Dial.

Good drainage is essential. Heavy soils are preferable to light ones. The latter suits the hybrid teas, but not the hybrid perpetuals. The ground should be deeply plowed or spaded and well manured. Dip the roots in a puddle of thick, clayey water before planting. This is better than watering and less laborious. Spread the roots out well and see that the soil is thoroughly firmed. The buds of worked plants should be covered about three inches. Neither roses nor any other plants will grow and thrive if loosely planted.

Winter Protection.

The question of proper winter protection is a vital one, and here many growers continue to make mistakes. No protection should be afforded until just before freezing-up weather. In New England this work is done about the end of November, and consists of drawing soil up to the stems closely until they are buried about six inches. No other covering is really needed for hybrid perpetuals. Manure, straw, leaves, pine needles and other covering are often used, but nothing is better than earth, for, unless the plants are standing in water, the wood will be found green from below the earth protection. In the case of hybrid teas, in addition to soiling them, leaves and spruce boughs are necessary. Unless the location is a mild one, it is better to dig up the plants and either bury them in the ground until spring or heel together thickly in a coldframe.

Pruning.

The question is often asked, should hybrid perpetuals be cut back a little in the fall? It is not wise to do any trimming until spring, and it also is well not to be in too big a rush about doing it even then. Many are tempted to head back the plants with the first signs of spring. Such plants are liable to make nice breaks and have them killed back by a late, severe frost. In southeastern Massachusetts from April 10 to 15 is sufficiently early.

The bulk of growers err in not pruning hybrids severely enough. On the most robust varieties, it is better not to leave over eight to ten inches of the strongest shoots, and on weaker ones half that length is sufficient. All weak wood should be removed entirely. The severe cutting back insures vigorous shoots, such as cannot be had from light pruning, and it enables one the more readily to protect part of the current season's growth when earthing-up time comes.

While hybrid perpetuals thrive best on rather heavy land, the increasingly popular hybrid teas do better on light soil which has been heavily manured. A mulching and occasional waterings are beneficial and help to keep the plants flowering. It need hardly be stated that roses, in common with other plants, delight to have the soil constantly stirred about them during the growing season.

Some Good Sorts.

A selection of the best hybrid perpetuals, which I have found to be hardy in Massachusetts, is as follows: Ulrich Brunner, Frau Karl Druschki, Mrs. John Laing, Captain Hayward, Magna Charta, Paul Neyron, Gustave Piganeau, Clio, Susanne Marie Rodocanachi, Mrs. R. G. Sharman-Crawford, Prince Camille de Rohan, Mme. Gabriel Luizet, General Jacqueminot, Earl of Dufferin and Alfred Colomb. Of the foregoing, Frau Karl Druschki, Mrs. John Laing, Mrs. Sharman-Crawford and General Jacqueminot are the most persistent late summer and fall bloomers.

A few really fine hybrid teas are: Bessie Brown, Gruss an Teplitz, splendid for bedding; Florence Pemberton, Killarney, Caroline Testout, Etoile de France, Mrs. W. J. Grant, Viscountess Folkstone, Maman Cochet, both white and pink; Mme. Abel Chatenay, Mme. Ravary, La France, Augustine Guinoissau and Marquise Litta.

The Ramblers.

The rambler roses are growing in favor yearly. Since the advent of Crimson Rambler, which is still the most widely popular variety, there have been some splendid additions to this class. Crimson Rambler is handsome while in bloom; the greatest defect is its poor foliage. The pink ramblers, on the other hand, have handsome, shiny leaves, which remain bright and attractive the whole season. For this reason many are now using these in preference to the old-time favorite. Of the several pink varieties, I consider Farquhar the best. The flowers are larger and of a clearer pink color than Dorothy Perkins. Plants set out two years ago have this season made shoots thirty feet or more in length. Dorothy Perkins and Lady Gay, the latter one of M. H. Walsh's seedlings, are both good. Debutante, soft pink; Hiawatha, single scarlet, and Sweetheart, pink fading white, have all withstood 20 degrees below zero. The so-called yellow Rambler, Aglaia, is, in reality, a creamy white color, but is not reliably hardy and must be covered, for a temperature of 10 degrees below zero will kill it to the ground.

All the ramblers do well planted in the fall. As soon as they have bloomed, cut away the old flowering wood. To insure vigorous growth the first season, it pays to cut the whole plant down. C.

WINTERING BABY RAMBLERS.

I have a number of Baby ramblers in pots. They have been in pots plunged outdoors all summer. Will you please let me know if they can be kept dormant in an underground cellar until about February, or what treatment would you advise so as to have them in bloom in March or for Easter? W. B.

The pot ramblers will keep all right in such a cellar as you describe, provided it is not too warm. The temperature should be as near the freezing point as possible, to keep the plants dormant. If a few degrees below freezing, it will not do any harm.

To have them in flower in March, it will be necessary to start them earlier than February. House them about January 1, starting in a temperature of 40 to 45 degrees at night and giving them warmer quarters by 10 degrees when they are breaking freely. For Easter you should get your plants under way by February 1. Winters are erratic, climatically speaking, and it is safer to start a few days too early rather than the reverse. Hard forcing spoils the quality of the flowers, so give them ten weeks from start to finish, in a temperature starting at 40 to 45 degrees and rising to 55 degrees at night. C. W.

GOLD MEDAL ROSES.

At the autumn show of the National Rose Society of England in September ten seedling roses were exhibited, of which four received gold medals. That so many should be considered worthy of the highest award makes the occasion memorable. The medal varieties are described by H. E. Molyneux as follows:

Lady Alice Stanley.—A hybrid tea raised by S. McGredy & Son, Portadown, Ireland; a large flower with a round petal of good shape, not quite the usual petal of the exhibition rose, but none the less pleasing on that account, coming well to a point in the younger flowers. The scheme of color is after the style of that old garden rose, Grand Due A. de Luxembourg, or the more modern Mrs. E. G. Hill, namely, having the deeper shade on the outside of the petal and the lighter shade inside, the reverse of the usual color scheme, the color outside being a deep coral rose, inside pale flesh, suffused pink; fragrant, a good grower and free autumnal.

His Majesty.—A hybrid tea also raised by McGredy & Son; a fine dark crimson flower of great size and good substance; of the usual exhibition type with high pointed center; the plant exhibited showed strong growth, with flowers produced at the end of each shoot; a very promising variety, fragrant.

A. Hill Gray.—A tea raised by Alexander Dickson & Sons, Newtownards, Ireland; a beautiful rose of excellent shape; delightful pale yellow, fragrant and a good grower; undoubtedly the finest rose staged in the class.

Dr. O'Donel Browne.—A hybrid tea approaching closely to the hybrid perpetuals, raised by Dickson & Sons and sent out by them this year; a fine-shaped flower, resembling Dupuy Jamain in color and shape, but coming much better than that old favorite, being particularly good in autumn; a good, vigorous grower with strong perfume, and, moreover, free flowering; color rosy carmine.

LILIUM LONGIFLORUM.

"We would like to know how to take care of longiflorum multiflorum bulbs after they arrive, how to plant the bulbs and how to take care of them until sprouted. Could they be set under benches in a carnation house and should litter be put on?"

R. H. G.

Pot as soon as possible after you receive them. Use 5-inch pots for small, and 6-inch pots for large bulbs. Put some sand below and above the bulbs in potting and let the soil just cover them. Do not use any fresh manure in your compost.

The bulbs can be placed under a carnation bench if the drainings from the bench will not keep the soil wet in the pots. If you can place them in a heated shed or on a cellar floor they will start nicely. They are just as well in the dark until they start to grow. You can cover them with ashes, moss or hay. Avoid keeping them wet at the root in the early stages of growth. Better run them on the dry side. They will do well for a time in a temperature of 45 degrees at night; when the shoots appear, 10 degrees higher can be given advantageously.

KEROSENE.

Please inform me how I can apply kerosene to plants. I used to spray the woodwork with it, against the common spider, but as they also are troublesome among the plants I would like to get rid of them. I have used tobacco extracts pretty strong, but without any result. Can I spray my plants with clean kerosene and then give them a good syringing afterwards without injury?"

T. B.

If you apply pure kerosene to your plants, no amount of after syringing will save them from complete destruction. A wine-glassful to a three-gallon pail is as strong a dose as can safely be used, and then care has to be taken that it is well mixed; it cannot be applied at all to any plants with woolly foliage.

We do not know what the common spider is you refer to. As a rule, these insects do no special harm to plants, while some are beneficial through destroying green and black aphids. You had better try some other form of fumigation before syringing with any kerosene mixture. The nicotine extracts and hydrocyanic acid gas should all prove sufficiently deadly to kill any insect pests you have.

The safest way to use kerosene is in an emulsion. To make this, use one-half pound of any good hard soap, one gallon boiling water, two gallons kerosene. Dissolve the soap in the water, add the kerosene and churn with a pump or syringe for ten minutes. Dilute twenty-five times before applying for aphids, etc. For scale it can be used diluted ten times.

My cyclamens are in 5-inch pots and the pots are full of roots. I want them in the best possible shape by Christmas. Would you shift them into 6-inch pots, or leave them in their present quarters?"

It is now rather late to shift your cyclamens intended for Christmas flowering. Had you purposed holding these for early spring sales, it would be all right to give them a shift, but it will be much better to keep them in 5-inch pots now. As these are well filled with roots, give them a sprinkling once a fortnight of some highly concentrated fertilizer, like Clay's fertilizer, alternating this with doses of liquid manure.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Lilies.

Harrisii lilies wanted for Thanksgiving should now have the buds separated so that they can be easily counted. Later plants, for Christmas, are now about a foot high and if buds are showing by the middle of November a good proportion will be in season. It is hardly possible to get a whole batch in at any one time. There would appear to be more variation in the flowering of Harrisii than longiflorum; still a few lilies come in useful for design work almost any time. Plants showing disease might as well be thrown out at once. The flowers will all be malformed and of no value. As the pots are now full of active roots, use liquid manure once in four or five days and be sure that you do not allow aphids to secure any foothold in the tops of the shoots.

Japanese longiflorums should be potted as soon as they come to hand. Give a good soaking of water and then keep on the dry side until the roots become active. A cellar floor is a good place to stand the pots on; failing this, a bench in a cool house where water is not likely to soak the pots. A mulching of ashes or short straw will prevent the soil from drying out and can be left on until the shoots push through it. Earlier longiflorums will now be above the ground and if carried in a house kept at 50 degrees at night will do nicely.

Speciosums for winter blooming, potted in late summer, are already showing flower buds in some cases. A fair proportion of these will be along for Christmas, when they usually meet with a fairly good sale. We do not subject these to as hard forcing as the Harrisii, 55 to 60 degrees at night being better for them than a temperature 10 degrees higher. It will be a month yet before the present season's speciosum and auratum bulbs come to hand. No time should be lost in getting them into the soil when they arrive. No bulbous plants suffer more from being out of the soil than lilies.

Schizanthus.

Some nice little plants of Schizanthus Wisetonensis were noted in the eastern markets at Christmas a year ago. This schizanthus is destined to become a popular market plant. It is of easy culture, has a neat, stocky habit, blooms for a long time and ships well. The other forms of schizanthus are too tall-growing to make acceptable commercial plants.

Seed sown in August, as previously suggested, should by this time have produced bushy little stock in 6-inch pots. A little pinching may be needed to keep them shapely, but S. Wisetonensis, owing to its dwarf habit, needs less of this than any other variety. A cool house, with plenty of light, is essential to their well-being; in fact, if the houses are crowded, the plants will do finely in coldframes for some time yet, if afforded a covering on cold nights. Compost such as is used for chrysanthemums will suit schizanthus, and as they are vigorous rooting subjects plenty of water is required at the roots. They will not stand heavy fumigation.

For late winter flowering make a successional sowing now, dropping two or three seeds in small pots.

Antirrhinums.

Many of the early chrysanthemums being now out of the way, some of the bench space can be given to antirrhinums. A coating of rotted manure or a dusting of bone flour should be worked into the soil before planting. If you want first-class spikes, which will bring the best market price, it is necessary to reduce the number of shoots on each plant to from three to six. Rub off all others as they appear. These will net you more money than double the number of small ones.

Early benched antirrhinums are already coming into bloom. There is no special advantage in flowering them while mums are in season, and it will pay to pinch back these shoots and secure a crop during December and January, when sales for them will be better. Be sure that you properly support the plants, so as to have straight stems. There will be no sale for those with twisted stems.

Calceolarias.

The best place for calceolarias still is a coldframe; one which can be protected from frost until the middle of November is much better for the plants than any greenhouse. You will notice how much faster the calceolarias are growing now that the cooler weather is here. As the sun is still hot during the day, it will be necessary to have a little cheesecloth over the plants for two or three hours daily. Spread the pots out so that the leaves do not crowd and do any necessary potting before the roots become matted. A compost of one-half loam, one-fourth rotted cow manure and one-fourth leaf-mold will grow good calceolarias. Add some sharp sand and fine charcoal to give it porosity.

Dahlias.

Frosts will have cut off the bulk of dahlias now in the northern states. We do not like to be in too big a hurry about cutting the stems down, as hot weather usually follows the first killing frost. Leave enough top to tie labels to securely and after digging let the roots have a thorough drying in the sun before placing under cover. A cellar which will keep potatoes will answer equally well for dahlias. If your stock is not large, pack them in boxes of dry sand and they will come out nice and plump in spring. Do not carry over any inferior varieties, for to be up-to-date you should secure a few of the newer peony or cactus-flowered sorts another spring.

Cannas.

In the north it is time to lift and store roots of cannas. When cut down let them have a good sun bath to stop any bleeding. Do not shake the soil too much from the roots before housing them. The flowering cannas, French, as

BULB STOCK....

■ ANOTHER GROWER'S VIEW.

In reply to Edward Reid's letter, in which he suggests the advisability of our going out of business, let me inform Mr. Reid that that sort of suggestion would not work, since it has reference to men who have studied the business and looked ahead too far at the probable intricacies to be caught in a trap that way.

What would we do, supposing such a thing were to happen? We would simply come up to your very doors, build greenhouses, force our bulbs, get our own retail stores, and wholesale ones also, if needed, and give you daffodils from Christmas to May, making you feel more dejected than you feel at present. There are about 30,000,000 bulbs planted down here by only four of the growers, at an outlay to us of some $60,000 or more, and the business is steadily increasing. It is a well-known fact that the daffodil's day is coming, as it is fast growing in favor, and for three to four weeks in the spring it is going to hold its own.

The best way for you to solve this problem is to get a move on you in the spring and find an outlet in the near-by smaller towns, if Philadelphia cannot handle the 300 or 400 boxes that are sent daily, for if you do not, we will. Also advise your fellowmen to send advices daily, so that we can ease up or send more as the case may be. There need be no glut if you will use system at your end.

Also remember, friend Reid, that when you talk of our retiring from business, you have to do with men who have got the grit, and got the bulbs, and got the dollars, too.

POAT BROS.

MORE COMPETITION IN SIGHT.

We have noted the letters in the REVIEW regarding daffodils and believe Mr. Reid has done grave injustice to the southern shippers of the cut blooms. It is true that they can be produced more cheaply than those under glass, but it is MOSCHOSMA RIPARIUM.

The merits of the new winter flowering plant, Moschosma riparium, seem to be overlooked by the majority of florists. Like many other novelties, it has to go through the ordeal of neglect or indifference before its beauty and utility are recognized.

It is a plant of the easiest culture, is not particular about soils and needs no pampering. Insects give it a wide berth. The leaves have an agreeable, musky fragrance. It is easily propagated. Cuttings put in 2-inch pots and placed in full sunshine, just as we do with geraniums, are rooted in a few weeks. Plants well grown for one year make fine specimens, two to three feet high and as much through. The growth is compact, large plants having over 100 stems, which, when densely covered with fine white, spiraea-like flowers in midwinter, are really beautiful objects.

As a spraying flower in fine cut flower work there is nothing more useful in its season of bloom, which lasts about ten weeks. It is in its best condition at Christmas and New Year's.

E. FRYER.

NAME OF FLOWERS.

Please tell me the name of the flowers I enclose. These were in a sheltered place south of a building, so frost did not reach them.

C. H. K.

The name of the flowers is Calendula officinalis Orange King, commonly called pot marigold.

SALTFORD AT HOME.

George Saltford, the New York wholesale florist, achieved his first distinction as a violet grower at Rhinebeck, and he still has interests "up the river." The accompanying illustration shows him keeping abreast of progress in the violet world, picking flowers in one of his houses. It is the report from Rhinebeck that the stock throughout that district is in excellent shape and that all which is needed to give thoroughly satisfactory flowers is a little cool weather. The weather at Rhinebeck has been much too warm in the last fortnight, temperatures having gone up to almost 90 degrees around October 15, and under such conditions the best of quality cannot be expected, even if the plants are clean and free from disease.

ENGLAND'S LARGEST PLACE.

During a recent meeting of the Horticultural Trades' Association of Great Britain an afternoon was devoted to Thos. Rochford's mammoth establishment at Turnford Hall Nurseries, and proved all too short for the purpose, as will be easily understood when it is stated that the glass houses cover an area of fifty acres. One new house, just finished and being filled up with bulbs, measured 35x500 feet. The Turnford Hall Nursery contains a stock of commercial plants, mostly in enormous numbers and all showing marvelous cultivation. Kentias are grown literally by the acre, and range from seedlings to specimens twenty feet high, the big palm house being one of the finest sights. The old latania is still grown here in quantity, and there is a grand stock of the newer Phoenix Roebelenii.

George Saltford Picking Violets.

House after house of crotons was really a blaze of color, and one of Pandanus Veitchii was fine. Asparagus Sprengeri and plumosus are in immense quantities, and ferns also, though only in two or three varieties. The now well-known Todeaoides was in splendid order; one plant over five feet across and perfect all around. A number of this lovely fern had been established on pieces of dicksonia stems, forming exquisitely draped pillars of greenery; more delightful decorative subjects it would be difficult to imagine. A novelty in ferns was shown, in a most beautiful variety of Polypodium glaucum, but this will not be in commerce for a while.

The stock of pot roses outside, more especially climbers, was an eye-opener, some of the latter being fully twenty feet long and splendidly furnished. These were almost as attractive to a grower as when seen in their beauty in the spring. An interesting trial on view was a large batch of Richmond, Liberty and the new Rhea Reid, all planted side by side in a house for comparison. The new-comer is said by some to excel in freedom of blooming, but the experiment was not sufficiently advanced to form a reliable opinion.

Tons of grapes had to be passed with a rapid glance through the door, but many of the members stopped to see the working of a machine quite new to most of them. This was in the nature of a forge bellows and sent a strong air blast down a flexible pipe. The current was directed against each bunch of grapes in turn, blowing out spiders and their webs and any dust accumulated on the berries. We could not help noticing that in all the huge vineries not a twig was out of place or a superfluous leaf allowed, the attention to detail being as marked here as in the plant department.

An almost unique feature at Rochford's is the up-to-date cold storage plant, the details of which were explained by Mr. Kelsey. Two big engines supply the requisite power, and it was curious to see within a foot or two of the one at work, a thick covering of hoar frost on the pipes conveying the cold air to the storage chambers. In the large storage rooms were great stacks of boxes of lilies of the valley, spiraeas, lilacs, lilies, and other retarded stuff. These are now the material of a large trade, as well as supplying the immense requirements of the firm. The bulbs, etc., are stored in the exact temperatures found by practice to be the most favorable. Under the old system, when they were stored with other firms, it was found that the temperatures were regulated to suit meat and other stock and the results were so unsatisfactory that the firm put up a plant of its own, with most satisfactory results.

At the entrance stands the institute for the nursery employees, a model in every way; fitted up with every possible convenience from books to billiards, and managed by the men themselves for the common benefit.

ST. CHARLES, ILL.—Henry Swaby has completed his greenhouse, has it stocked and is ready for business.

NEWTON, MASS.—On the evening of October 10, F. William Rane and Harry F. Hall, the owners of a stable and greenhouse on Moffat road, suffered a heavy loss by fire. Mr. Rane is state forester and Mr. Hall is his business associate. The fire, which was caused by an explosion of the gasoline tank of an automobile, destroyed the stable and its contents, including two valuable horses, and greatly endangered the greenhouses. The damage was estimated at $7,000 and is partly covered by insurance.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

CURRENT NOTES.

The unseasonably hot weather we are getting in the east is having a bad effect on the flowers, and the Chicago show will unquestionably suffer by the paucity of exhibitors from this section, for that reason. Temperatures of 85 degrees in the shade mean damped flowers and heavy loss to exhibition growers. And flowers that do not damp blow open before they are nearly the size that they otherwise would be.

Any variety that comes through such a season as this unscathed may well be called a good one. Every day brings wails and lamentations through the mails and inquiries as to the best means to prevent flowers damping. I know of nothing more to do than shade the glass well with lime wash and keep on all the air possible night and day, using only enough water to prevent the leaves from wilting. After taking these precautions it's a case of grin and bear it, and the only ray of comfort is that one's neighbor is just as badly off as oneself.

It is usual to get warm, clear days in October, with cool nights, and in such conditions flowers develop rapidly, but when midsummer returns at this date it makes the flowers so soft and flabby that they wilt right down and damp terribly. Growers who do not feed their mums are not bothered to any great extent, as plants that have not been fed with nitrogenous manures produce harder flowers; but if one is looking for large flowers feeding is imperative and one must take chances on overdoing it.

While my own flowers have not damped so badly, the forcing temperature has brought out all the midseason kinds with a rush and it becomes a question of holding back the flowers for the shows.

Commercially the situation is bad, because before Polly Rose and Pacific are out of the way Beatrice May and Appleton are crowding them in the market, and the end is not yet. The pleasant weather is also keeping the flower buyer out in the country, enjoying himself, when by precedent he should be established in winter quarters in the city and looking for greenhouse products.

The early bird, the grower who marketed his product during the last days of September or first days of October, made more money than will the man who is shipping now. C. H. TOTTY.

THE POEHLMANN MUM.

A couple of years ago Chrysanthemum Mme. Sahut sported at the establishment of Poehlmann Bros. Co., at Morton Grove, Ill., giving a white flower that August Poehlmann liked so well he worked up stock of it and named it Virginia Poehlmann, for his daughter. Last spring stock was distributed to the trade and it is turning out so well for everyone so far reporting that the variety promises to become a leader. In form and substance the flower is like White Bonnaillon, only it is much earlier. It is a fine, solid flower and a splendid shipper. The photograph reproduced was taken October 14 and shows a bench of flowers grown without special care and purely for commercial purposes. The blooms were ready to cut a few days ahead of Touset. It is not a tall-growing sort, usually a little over three feet when the crown bud is taken. C. L. Washburn says it is a winner commercially and E. T. Wanzer says the same. It will no doubt be planted largely next year.

SCARCE VARIETIES.

Having made a batch of cuttings of the pompon mums this fall, as I am short of a certain variety, I am puzzled as to the best way to keep them over. I have never made cuttings at this time of the year before. My intentions were to take them inside, but I see I have not the room. How would it be to place them in a coldframe about two feet deep and cover them with leaves, and then cover with sash? They are in 2-inch pots and not well rooted as yet.

H. K.

The best way by far, if the plants are of kinds that you wish to be sure of keeping, would be to make room for them inside, even if something else has to be thrown out. The plants not being well rooted yet puts them in pretty poor shape to go through the winter in a coldframe. If you want to take the chance, of course it can be done, covering the plants with leaves after the weather gets cold, but you must remember that a 2-inch pot plant, if it lives through the winter, will be in pretty poor shape to make many cuttings next spring. I would say put the stock in a cold house and give it a chance to do something.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

Work of the Committees.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 17.—Gloria, day-break pink, exhibited by Elmer D. Smith, Adrian, Mich., scored 85 points commercial scale.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17.—No. 58-2-06, white, Japanese incurved, exhibited by Elmer D. Smith, scored 86 points commercial and 86 points exhibition scale.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Dark sport of Glory of Pacific, dark mauve, exhibited by Samuel Cockburn & Sons, Woodlawn, N. Y., scored 79 points commercial scale. The same variety in Philadelphia scored 72 points commercial scale and in Cincinnati it scored 77 points commercial scale. DAVID FRASER, Sec'y.

THE REVIEW will send Scott's Manual post paid for $5.00.

Bench of Chrysanthemum Virginia Poehlmann.

CHRYSANTHEMUM GLORIA.

Elmer D. Smith, Adrian, Mich., thinks he has a first-class thing in Chrysanthemum Gloria. We have early yellows and early whites, but a good pink is something which has been lacking. In Gloria Mr. Smith hopes he has something which will fill the bill. It was ready for exhibition October 10, this year, and scored eighty-five points before the Chrysanthemum Society's New York committee on that date. It was exhibited October 16 at Cincinnati and Chicago, but the score has not yet been announced. This is a Japanese incurved, of Enchantress pink color. It grows four feet in height and Mr. Smith describes it as "Best from August 25 to September 5; other buds lack in color."

OBITUARY.George J. Evans.

After an illness of eleven weeks, George J. Evans, of Flint, Mich., passed away October 14.

Mr. Evans had been actively engaged in landscape gardening and florists' work all his life. Since his resignation at the establishment of Walker Bros. he had been engaged in business for himself. Although he had not a large establishment, he did a thriving business. Mr. Evans was a native of England, coming to this country in 1891, with his wife, three daughters and one son, all of whom survive. Richard E. Evans, florist, of Salt Lake City, Utah, is a brother of the deceased.

Mrs. Evans always has taken an active part in the business and will continue it, with the assistance of her son.

The funeral of Mr. Evans was held from St. Paul's Episcopal church at Flint and the numerous flower tributes which came from far and near told of respect, love and sympathy.

Mrs. George Yantz.

Mrs. George Yantz, proprietor of the Border Queen Greenhouse at Caldwell, Kan., went recently to visit a daughter near Little Rock, Ark., and while there died suddenly of apoplexy October 9. Mrs. George H. Yantz was born near St. Louis, August 27, 1850. She moved from there to Caldwell some thirty years ago and, with her husband, had been engaged in the florists' business for about four years. She was a leading member of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Methodist church. Mr. and Mrs. Yantz were fixed so they could enjoy life the remainder of their time and it was a great shock to Mr. Yantz when the telegrams came announcing her sudden sickness and death.

Thomas H. Geraghty.

Thomas H. Geraghty, after a long and painful illness with dropsy, died at Newport, R. I., October 16, at the age of 65 years. Though he was born in Ireland, Mr. Geraghty lived practically all his life in Newport, his residence in the United States dating back to 1858. He worked at Stamford, Conn., first and then removed to Newport about forty-five years ago. He was one of the best known members of the craft in Newport, though he had not done much work during the last few years. He first worked at his trade as a gardener for several years and then went into business with Thomas Galvin, being one of the first to establish a florists' business in that city. He remained associated with Mr. Galvin for fourteen years, the firm name being Galvin & Geraghty. Retiring from this partnership, Mr. Geraghty built and operated the greenhouses on Chapel street, Newport, now owned by John H. Phelan.

Chrysanthemum Gloria.

Mr. Geraghty was an expert at his business. He had a wide knowledge of flowers, and his advice was much sought by others in the trade. He wrote a great deal on flowers and on landscape gardening. He was for many years a member of St. Mary's parish.

He is survived by two sons, John S. Geraghty and Thomas H. Geraghty, Jr., and three daughters.

Mrs. Mary E. Johnston.

Mrs. Mary E. Johnston, widow of Thomas J. Johnston, died at her home in Providence, R. I., October 17, after a brief illness. She was out riding last week, when she had a slight chill and had to be taken home. Pneumonia rapidly developed and she failed to rally. Mrs. Johnston was the widow of Thomas J. Johnston, one of the best known florists of Providence, who died suddenly in August, 1907. A few weeks later a son died, and with Mrs. Johnston's death the entire family is removed, except a small boy. Since Mr. Johnston's death Mrs. Johnston has conducted the business established by her husband at 179 Weybosset street.

Gustav Harrison.

Gustav Harrison, of Washington, D. C., formerly with the Elizabeth Nursery Co., Elizabeth, N. J., died suddenly of heart failure October 16. He was 42 years of age and a capable landscape architect.

Ed. Batey.

Ed Batey, who formerly conducted a nursery in Missouri but lately had been living at Nashville, Tenn., died recently in California. He was 47 years old. He had been in poor health for several years and had gone to California some weeks ago in the hope of benefiting his health. His wife and only child—a son almost of age—were to have joined him about the middle of this month.

HANOVER, MASS.—J. W. Beal is building a large addition to his greenhouse.

DORCHESTER, MASS.—David Ring, formerly of Natick, has been engaged as superintendent of the Rosemere Conservatories, now owned by Eugene N. Foss. In Natick Mr. Ring obtained a thorough knowledge of the business while in the employ of the Waban Rose Conservatories and of Robert Montgomery.

 Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly,
 New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.
 Officers for 1909: President, J. A. Valentine, Denver, Colo.; vice-president, E. G. Gillett, Cincinnati, O.; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Cincinnati, O., August 19 to 22, 1909.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 6 to 14, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman; J. H. Burdett, secretary, 1411 First National Bank Bldg., Chicago.

Results bring advertising.
 The REVIEW brings results.

THE National Council of Horticulture has begun its autumn series of seasonable articles.

FLORISTS who grow for their own retail trade should plant a few bulbs of the white Watsonia Ardernei.

A MOVEMENT is on foot in England to raise funds for a memorial to George Nicholson, author of Nicholson's Dictionary of Gardening, who died recently.

IF Constant Reader will refer to the recent articles of Miss Gertrude Blair, on window decorating, he will doubtless find a suggestion that will cover his need.

WITH the national election less than two weeks away, no one can find room for complaint that business has been "disturbed;" the campaign has been quiet enough to suit any advocate of longer presidential terms.

THE weather is a most important factor in the cut flower trade, and the unseasonable heat of the middle of October was disastrous in its effects. After a few days of cooler conditions, the forecaster says he sees nothing but warm weather in sight for the greater part of the country.

THE premium list has been issued for the exhibition of the Horticultural Society of New York, to be held at the Museum of Natural History, New York city, November 17 to 20. F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown, is chairman of the committee. Copies of the circular may be had by addressing the secretary, 35 Liberty street, New York.

LADIES' S. A. F.

The Ladies' Society of American Florists have accepted the invitation to the banquet Tuesday evening, November 10, at the Auditorium Annex, Chicago.
 On Wednesday, November 11, the society will give a theater party for its members, who will please wear their badge pin. Members of the Ladies' S. A. F. will report to the chairman of entertainment committee, Mrs. J. C. Vaughan, or the secretary, Mrs. C. H. Maynard, Tuesday morning, November 10, at the exhibition hall.

Mrs. W. J. VESEY, Pres.

NATIONAL FLOWER SHOW.

President Traendly has decided that the S. A. F. gold medal shall not be awarded for any specific exhibit, but it will be left to the judges to award it to any exhibit, provided there is an exhibit in the show which may be deemed worthy of so high an award. It was provided by the executive board of the S. A. F. also that the award of this gold medal should not be complete until the action of the committee had been specifically ratified by the executive committee of the flower show.

The mistake was made in the final edition of the premium list in giving the judges nominated by the American Carnation Society. Instead of the names given in the premium list the nominees are Wm. Nicholson, Fred Burki and Peter Fisher. Mr. Nicholson, who was also one of the four nominees presented by the Chrysanthemum Society, will probably be withdrawn as a judge of Division A. J. H. BURDETT, Sec'y.

THE FLORISTS' BIBLIOGRAPHY.

The REVIEW has received a copy of "The Florists' Bibliography," in which the author, C. Harmon Payne, says in his preface: "We have had bibliographies of garden literature in the past and most of them render excellent service in their way, but they are of little or no use to the florist or to the literary worker in floriculture, who, up to the present, has had no authority to which he could turn for information on the books relating to subjects in which he may be chiefly concerned. The main idea throughout has been to fill a gap in horticultural literature by compiling an authentic work of reference limited to books and treatises exclusively, or almost exclusively, devoted to florists' flowers and the flower garden."

How carefully the work must have been done is shown by the fact that nowhere is included "The Florists' Manual," by William Scott, the standard, most largely sold, most widely known and most frequently consulted treatise on commercial floriculture that ever has been printed in the English language, although minor American works are included.

THE COMMON ARBOR-VITAE.

Enclosed you will find a twig of a spruce tree, with seed pods. Will you kindly let me know what kind of a spruce it is and also how I can raise them from seed, when to plant and how to treat them when they come up?

E. W. C.

The plant is the common arbor-vitae, Thuja occidentalis. Sow the seed in early spring in boxes of sandy loam and keep either in a cool greenhouse or frame. Keep the seedlings protected from bright sunshine the first year. They can be planted out in nursery rows the second season. The seeds of this thuya germinate freely, and the variety is one of the hardiest of our native evergreens.

Mums! Mums!

For All Saints' Day

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The anticipated slump in the market arrived the latter part of last week and this week opened with the cut flower center choked with soft stock, as the result of the heat wave of the week before. The slump in prices was almost as radical as was the advance in the few days after frost hit the outdoor stock. Then prices went up like a balloon. They came down as though the parachute had failed to work.

While there is far too much stock now in the market, it is noticeable that a great deal of it is poor and that the demand is much stronger for the best grade than it is for the cheaper stock. The result is that strictly fancy stock is holding up fairly well in price, while the low grades are sacrificed. Some of the buyers have a great deal of difficulty in understanding why it is they are required to pay such good prices for the stock they want, while the counters are loaded with flowers—only they are not the grade of flowers people want.

Possibly the greatest change is in the carnation situation. From a condition of pronounced shortage, we now have an oversupply. While it was to be expected that crops would come on, the warm weather hastened them and took much of the quality out of the flowers, and it had been none too good before. There are, however, enough fairly good carnations to meet the present demand and the poorest stock is selling at midsummer prices.

The increase in mums also was large. The better grades are selling well and at prices which, for the best, are possibly as good as were realized at this date last year; but the small stock, the soft flowers and the ones that show careless growing, have taken a decided tumble, and prices on these are now less than was realized last year for the same grade. There now is an abundance of small mums which can be sold at from 5 cents to 12½ cents, and the volume of business is increased by the presence of this stock.

Roses also are accumulating. Of course they show the results of the heat, as does everything else. Richmond is specially abundant and slow sale. Some one stock is seen of this variety. Long Beauties are coming in more heavily and, because of the chrysanthemum competition, do not move the way they did when mums were scarce.

Violets are holding their own as well as anything, in price, not in quality, for it has been hot at Rhinebeck and in the cars. For the moment, Easter lilies are not abundant and an occasional large order boosts the price. Valley is in oversupply. Green goods, too, are abundant; Florida is sending plumosus and Sprenger and it is slow sale.

The first half of October was all right. No one complained. The same period last year is still remembered because of its excellent business, and as a whole the market probably has done fully as much this year, but if warm weather continues the prospect is not good. A change to cold, dark weather will bring a reversal of conditions within forty-eight hours.

In this connection it is worth while noting that eastern stock is seeking this market. Cattleyas especially are being shipped here in quantity from the eastern seaboard. Valley, too, is being re-consigned to this market by New York wholesalers. Inquiries are received from growers of all sorts of stock, including Beauties, who want to divert a part of their shipments from the eastern wholesale houses. A fortnight ago they would have been welcome; now they are not needed.

All Saints' Day.

Word has come from New Orleans that weather conditions there have been unfavorable for the outdoor mums and that this market is likely to be called upon to supply large quantities of stock for October 31 and November 1. The wholesalers are glad to hear it. They are in a position to supply everything that is wanted, without advancing prices, and New Orleans business is being solicited with much more enthusiasm than usual. It is a long haul. Frequently an extra express car must be put on the Illinois Central 6 o'clock train the night that the All Saints' day shipments go out.

Light Boxes.

Ever since the express companies put on an arbitrary charge of 40 cents per hundred for the collection and cartage of empties to the depots, the wholesalers as well as the growers have been figuring on how to reduce the payments to the express companies. Previously weight never was considered and the boxes were made heavier and heavier, with the result that charges were made higher and higher, even while rates remained the same. Now the tendency is to do away with wood boxes altogether. E. C. Am-ling says nearly all of his growers have adopted the corrugated pasteboard box, because the average shipper saves in express charges the cost of the paper box each time it comes in. The real saving results from the fact that the boxes can be bundled and shipped back by freight, at slight cost, being good for several trips. The stock travels in them as well as in wood boxes and the grower does not pay express on thirty to fifty pounds of wood every time he sends in a few hundred carnations.

Reinbergs Make a Trade.

Peter Reinberg and George Reinberg have made an arrangement as the result of which they will exchange stores. Within the next ten days Peter Reinberg will move into the store now occupied by George Reinberg and the latter will move from the Randolph street side of the building to the Wabash avenue side. The change gives each room more in accordance with the size of the cut.

The Social Season.

John C. Enders, secretary of the Wholesale Florists' Employees' Club, says the success of their third annual reception and ball is assured, because the sale of the tickets has been larger than ever. The date is Wednesday evening, October 28, at Columbia hall, 638 North Clark street. Last year the boys achieved a first-class success.

The employees of the E. Wienhoeber Co. will give their annual reception and dance at the Svithoid Club, 1768 Wrightwood avenue, on the evening of Novem-

CHRYSANTHEMUMS Roses and Carnations

Our stock is well known to be the finest that can be produced and our crops are now just coming on, so we can take the best of care of all orders. We look for a large demand from the south for but expect the supply to be ample to take care of all orders without advance in prices.

Remember that while our reputation is made by the special fancy stock we produce in such large quantity, we have shorter lengths for all who want them. So large a part of our trade calls for "Fancy," we are able to make attractive prices to buyers of shorter stock, especially if a quantity is taken. Our Carnations are now in good crop and we can supply all orders. Fine stock at reasonable prices. No order too large for us to fill; no order too small to receive our careful attention. Standing orders solicited

We are now prepared to supply a fine grade of ORCHIDS.

Various Notes.

Herman Meyers, formerly with Jensen & Dekema, is now foreman at the Columbine Gardens, Westminster, Colo., where the greenhouses are planted almost entirely to carnations.

Robert Johnstone, well known in this market, is now on Valmora ranch, near Watrous, N. M., seeking to regain his health. The doctors told him that he would succumb to tuberculosis if he remained in this climate.

E. T. Wanzer, Wheaton, Ill., is building a new house 20x81, to be used for miscellaneous stock. They are now cutting Virginia Poehlmann chrysanthemum, which R. Scheffer, the foreman, says easily beats anything else on the place and is regarded as an ideal variety. It will be grown largely next season, displacing several other early varieties. The carnations also are looking well. He is one of Randall's shippers.

Wendland & Keimel, Elmhurst, Ill., are again cutting fine Killarney. This is a new place and they did not get the heating plant connected up until the cold weather struck in August, with the result that they had a bad case of mildew. This has now been overcome.

Julius Schnapp, on Forty-seventh street, maintains a neat store, with conservatory in the rear, and appears to be making progress.

Miss Mamie Corbett, who has been with Bassett & Washburn, is now keeping the books for Peter Reinberg.

Peter Scrozynski has his place filled with Bostons and rubbers. His Easter lilies will all be longiflorums. He wants late dug stock and says his largest batch of bulbs was delivered and potted last week.

Charles Fisk reports an occasional burst of activity in the retail business on the west side, but says that in general things are moving along much as usual.

Vaughan & Sperry say that business with them is now running fifty per cent ahead of last year.

Scheiden & Schoos are cutting some fine flowers of their red seedling, which has been named W. H. Taft. The stem has considerably improved.

W. N. Rudd, at Mount Greenwood, is again shipping chrysanthemums to the E. F. Winterson Co.

John Kruchten & Co. say they filled one order for 3,500 carnations last week, while stock still was scarce, and regarded it as something of an accomplishment.

C. L. Washburn says that he does not know of any recent introduction among chrysanthemums that was of more importance than the dissemination of Virginia Poehlmann, the white sport of Mme. Sahut. It is a fine commercial variety and all the growers who have it this year will plant it more largely next season.

August Poehlmann stated one day last week that they were not yet cutting from more than one-fourth of their place. Perhaps the proportion has been increased in the last few days, but there is yet to come a large increase in the market's supply through the bringing into crop of the rest of their glass.

Sweet peas are again in the market and it will not be long before the supply is large. E. H. Hunt had two shippers who began last week, and others who called attention to peas this week were Weiland & Risch and E. C. Ameling. Doubtless others have them.

Joseph Foerster is now with the J. B. Deamud Co.

A. P. Frey, whose place at Crown Point is known as the Rose Lawn Nursery, is growing primulas and other plants for the trade. He has some fine strains.

Wietor Bros. are cutting the Mrs. Jardine rose in only limited quantity as yet, but say it looks well.

C. W. McKellar says he sold as many as 600 cattleyas in a single day last week, but that the demand here is not sufficient to consume the overflow from the eastern markets.

The J. A. Budlong establishment is better pleased each season with the use of grafted rose stock. Several new varieties of roses are being tried this year.

Percy Jones says all the available space in the Flower Growers' market is rented.

Kennicott Bros. Co. says wild smilax is selling better than "tame" greens, for the indoor stock is going a little slow since the fall openings.

John Zech says October is a much better month for Zech & Mann than it was a year ago.

F. F. Benthley reports Killarney as selling out quickly, while Maid is slow and Bride accumulates.

The Thompson Carnation Co. affairs were again in court at Joliet, beginning October 16.

Visitors: Edw. Amerpohl, Janesville, Wis.; S. M. Wyatt, Watseka, Ill.; Otto Koenig, St. Louis, Mo.

PLYMOUTH, MASS.—C. T. Stevens has bought the flower store at 10 Court street, formerly run by F. H. Lanman, and will run it in connection with his greenhouses. The store is being remodeled and thoroughly overhauled.

NANTICOKE, PA.—The Park Floral Co., whose greenhouses are located in Dewy Park, has opened a branch store on Main street, in the building formerly occupied by the Y. M. C. A. Miss Eldredge, an experienced designer of Wilkes-Barre, has been placed in charge of the cut flower work in this store. The members of the company are Harry Cornell, of this city, and Edwin Salyer, who was connected with the Marvin Floral Co., of Wilkes-Barre, for ten years.

DETROIT.

There is no Detroit news letter this week, the state of the market and all other considerations being overshadowed by a piece of news that so engrosses the attention of the correspondent, Hugo Schroeter, that he finds himself in the same position as the country newspaper man famed in the annals of newspaperdom, who, when a big story "broke out" in his town, could only reply to the metropolitan editor's wire for a report: "All is excitement; can send nothing." The fact is, B. Schroeter is now a grandfather.

The young florist arrived at the home of Hugo Schroeter Monday morning, October 19. Both mother and child are doing finely.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade in the cut flower line was fairly good last week, still not what it should be, as we are having unusual weather for this time of the year. The cool weather has turned to midsummer warmth and, if it keeps up, the flower market will suffer severely. As it is now, chrysanthemum blooms are crowding roses and carnations and prices are considerably lower on all grades. All the wholesalers are receiving heavy shipments of mums. Monrovia, Polly Rose and Glory of Pacific, also Bergmann, are among the varieties in.

Roses almost could be called a glut, including Beauties, Richmond and Killarney. Bride and Maid are of fine quality, but prices in all grades are down. Carnations are holding their own, as there are not so many in the market at present and the demand seems good. Extra choice Rose-pink Enchantress bring $4 per hundred. Violets were coming better every day, but the hot weather will do them no good. Cosmos and dahlias and a few tuberose stalks are still to be had. Valley is fine and enough for the demand.

The market has a good supply in all greens.

A few good chrysanthemum plants are being shown by the uptown retailers.

Various Notes.

The Engelmann Botanical Club held its annual field meeting October 17 at Jefferson Barracks. There was a large attendance and the district south of the cemeteries was explored.

Joseph Marks, formerly with the A. L. Randall Co., Chicago, is spending a few days here with W. C. Smith.

Ostertag Bros. furnished the decorations at the Southern hotel for the Grain Dealers' National Association, which held its annual meeting there last week. The job was a large one and well executed.

The Horticultural Society held a flower show in the Jewish Educational building, Ninth and Carr streets, October 16 and 17, for the benefit of the school children, who crowded the hall on both days, the admission being free. Most of the flowers and plants were furnished by the Koenig Floral Co. and under the supervision of O. G. Koenig.

President Young called a meeting of the florist bowlers, at Smith's, October 17, to organize a bowling team. An-

The Market.

With the advent of chrysanthemums, there comes some increase in the cut flower business. The change in the weather to its present clear and cool condition has also enlivened trade to some extent.

Roses are coming in large quantities and some are selling at low figures. American Beauties can now be had in all grades and the stock is good. Richmond is plentiful and good, while Bride and Bridesmaid are equal to the demand. Killarney has been short on crop, but shows good promise for another week.

Chrysanthemums are coming in, not as yet in great numbers, but nearly enough to supply the demand. There

NEW YORK.

The Market.

A week ago we were talking frost and preparing for winter. Before the week was over we were sweltering in a temperature of 80 degrees and Sunday was nearly 10 degrees hotter, and the warmest October 17 ever known in New York. This week opens about the same.

The intense heat has ripened everything abnormally and rushed the crop of roses and mums upon an already overcrowded market. Of these, carnations, violets and orchids there are more than enough and prices are down on rock bottom again. Beauties, the very best of them, have sold as low as at $10 a hundred. That tells the story. The Beauty is the pulse of the market. When that beats low the whole structure barely evinces life. The prices of mums are not much, if any, more than half those of a year ago.

Many varieties of orchids are here and prices are barely steady. There are not enough October weddings. One firm in Rutherford cuts 500 cattleyas daily. Imagine the number that now reach New York! Enough to take care of all the cities and the brides from the Hudson to the Pacific.

Violets begin to look natural in color and size and there seems to be no fear of any scarcity. I saw the best of them going at 35 cents a hundred Saturday, and this is not the only market now, it seems, for the Rhinebeck product. Thousands are shipped daily to Buffalo, Cleve-

"It's easy enough to be pleasant when life goes by like a song,
But the man worth while, is the man who will smile when everything goes dead wrong."

One had to be a philosopher to do much smiling in the season of 1908. But "there's a good time coming" and "the sun is always shining somewhere." Browning said the real man was "one who never turned his back, but marched, breast forward, never doubting clouds would break, holding that we are baffled to fight better." So we look ahead hopefully to the sure prosperity the future promises, with our eyes to the front, always. "The habit of looking on the bright side of things is worth more than a large fortune." "Don't worry over tomorrow; take care of today; tomorrow will take care of itself." Worry is time wasted. The past is dead. "Let the dead and the beautiful rest." There is no lasting foundation for any business that is not based on square dealing, liberality and fair consideration of a customer's interests. On these cornerstones we have established our business record and we are building higher every year.

Business has increased lately, but not to any great extent. A number of weddings and funerals have kept things moving along about normal. We have not had a killing frost yet, so there are some outdoor flowers still in evidence. Roses are plentiful, but carnations are scarce.

Various Notes.

A visit to the Wm. Blackman Floral Co. greenhouses showed everything in fine shape. The dark pink, light pink and white Enchantress are fine growth and full of buds. A house of Beacon is especially fine, with a great crop coming on for Christmas. A field of carnations outside is still producing nearly 1,000 blooms a day. A batch of fine stevia was noted. The chrysanthemums are excellent and show plenty of bloom. A bench of Princess of Wales violets gives promise of doing well. The roses are showing up well also. Fine summer weather, with the geranium beds still in full bloom, the frost only reaching the tender plants, is not conducive to business, but there still is something doing right along. The wholesale houses seem to clean up reasonably well every day, but prices are not satisfactory, the principal idea seeming to be to never miss a sale.

Mums are the ruling flower. Beauties are next, with enough for everybody. Roses are getting better every day and are never short in supply. Carnations are reaching all the way around since mums have become plentiful. Violets are going begging; the hot weather is against them.

The retail stores all seem to be busy, but their trade, as a rule, is for cheaper stock; high prices are prohibitive in every instance and good stock was never sold so cheap.

Trade has been fairly good for the last two weeks. While there has been little funeral work, there has been a fairly good demand for stock in general. Mums are coming in more plentifully, but there has been no glut of them here so far, as most of the growers are cutting them closely to fill orders. Carnations are more plentiful and the first-class blooms find ready sale, while the poorer grades are hard to move. Roses are fine now, considering the warm days we have had in the last week, which are bringing the mums out very soft.

Violets are coming in, but are rather short-stemmed and move slowly. The single ones, which are grown here mostly, are looking fine and promise to be in good shape in the next week or so. Greens are rather scarce at this time, as the most of them are hardly ready for cutting.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club decided to give its first dance the week before Thanksgiving, and no doubt it will be a success, as the boys are going to put their shoulders to the wheel to outdo the last one.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. is cutting some fine Touset mums and En-

State of Trade.

We are not able to give quite so good a report of the business for last week as for the previous week. Nevertheless, we have no great reason to complain, but feel justly satisfied with what business there was. Stock is coming in more plentifully, and this, of course, had something to do with the condition of business. Carnations are more plentiful and getting better each day. Roses are picking up again and Beauties are fine. Callas are commencing to look natural again, while chrysanthemums are back in full splendor, and look and sell as well as ever.

The weather is bright and very warm for this season of the year, and consequently stock matures rapidly.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Conditions in the cut flower market are unusual. The frost of October 12 has been succeeded by more than a week of extraordinarily warm weather, weather that would have been considered warm in summer, but is now most unseasonable. The effect has been to railroad all the staple crops on an already weak market. Add to this cosmos, never before so fine and plentiful, a few dahlias, and some of nearly every known variety of summer blooming flowers, and you will understand why it is that the demand is not sufficient to absorb anything like the supply of flowers coming into town today.

There is a demand. While it is weak and irregular in some quarters, in others it is excellent, and there can be no question that were the supply anywhere near normal for this season, or were we to have frost, which may come any night, the market would improve decidedly.

The early varieties of chrysanthemums, Glory of Pacific family, are already waning. Their place is being taken by the advance guard of the midseason sorts, Col. Appleton, Robert Halliday, Mme. Clementine Tousey, Ivory and Pink Ivory being prominent. Prices rule low, fully one-third lower than at this time last year. The quality is excellent. Careful examination justifies the belief that more chrysanthemums are being sold in this market today than were sold a year ago, but the total sales will not realize the same value.

Roses are extraordinarily plentiful. The smaller varieties are being moved in thousand lots at special quotations to sell them, it being impossible to dispose of most of those that reach town in any other way. The best still continue to bring listed quotations, but they must be good indeed to do this.

More carnations are being sold than a week ago, but they are not bringing any more than last week's low quotations, although the quality is improved. The hot weather interferes with their durability. The call for valley is erratic; some days it is excellent, on others poor. Violets are in oversupply. So great is the surplus that prices have reached a level where some of the wholesalers find it necessary to restrict production. Double violets are improving. Among the orchids, cattleyas are excellent value. Oncidiums are plentiful, but dendrobiums and cypripediums are rather scarce. There is a moderate supply of Easter lilies and callas. Pansies have made their appearance and are welcome. Greens have been selling better than for some time past, Asparagus plumosus in bunches being in brisk demand with those who make a specialty of it.

Pompon chrysanthemums have made their appearance. Autumn foliage and wild smilax continue important factors to the decorators. Fancy cosmos is probably better value for the money than anything else on the list today.

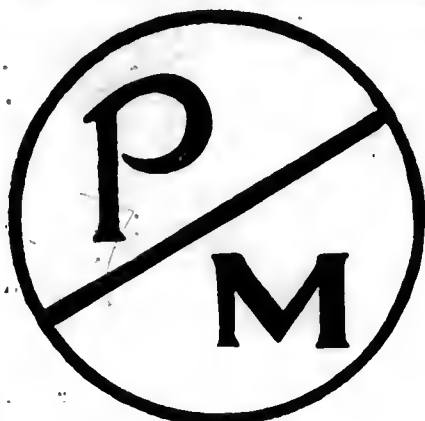

Dahlias.

A question appeared in the REVIEW two weeks ago as to the best half dozen varieties of dahlias for cut flowers. Feeling that this subject is one of great importance to the dahlia growers, three wholesale houses, making a specialty of this fall flower, have been asked to give their selection of varieties. In each case the number has been limited to six, as specified in the question, although it is not intended to give the impression that a dahlia grower should limit himself to that number of varieties. While a range of color is desirable, it is also most desirable that a grower should have enough of one variety to enable his wholesaler to fill orders in quantity for that particular variety. The following are the list:

W. E. McKissick—Mary McCullough, Jones, Nellie Stewart, Perle d'Or, Kriemhilde, Katherine Duer.

Leo Niessen Co.—Jack Rose, Perle d'Or, Bruton, Sylvia, Kriemhilde, Lyndhurst.

S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.—Jack Rose, Eloise (both seedlings of William F. Bassett's), Yellow Prince, Kriemhilde, White Kriemhilde, Pink Perle.

Arthur Herrington, Madison, N. J., was a visitor in this city this week. Mr. Herrington believes that it will take skill to hold the chrysanthemums in perfect condition for the fall shows this season.

Prof. Stuardson Brown was the speaker at the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's meeting October 20.

Howard E. McKissick has rejoined the floral army under the banner of his brother, W. E. McKissick.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Zella M. Bayersdorfer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Bayersdorfer, to Simon Casper, was made October 18. The home of the bride's parents, 1629 Diamond street, was beautifully decorated for the occasion. Toneware urns, supported on tripods and filled with American Beauty roses, were a prominent feature of the decorations that elicited much praise from the 500 guests who gathered to felicitate the happy couple.

H. M. Weiss & Sons, Hatboro, Pa., have begun the construction of a new half house 20x150 feet, Lord & Burnham material. This half house is the modern method of constructing a long house, the idea being to build half this fall for propagating purposes in the winter and the balance next season. By so doing the work can be distributed advantageously.

Paul J. Klingsporn, who has been a prominent figure in wholesale circles for many years, has resigned his position with W. E. McKissick to go south. Mr. Klingsporn purposes taking up other work in Florida.

William Berger has been busy with October weddings and suburban coming-out teas.

One of our hustling retailers advertised in his window a special sale of roses, different varieties, at 35 and 50 cents a dozen, October 17; and sold 1,000 blooms, which was about four times his usual sales for a Saturday in fall.

Lilley & Upton report the arrival of the first Col. Appleton chrysanthemums October 19. They find a good demand for pompons, which they have in four varieties.

The fall show of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society will open November 10, lasting four days. Entries should be made to David Rust, secretary, Horticultural hall, at least one week in advance.

William J. Baker reports the arrival of the first Pink Ivory of the season. The flowers were good.

Alfred M. Campbell has been doing well with his specialty, Asparagus plumosus in bunches.

C. H. Fox has sold his store at Twenty-first and Columbia avenues to John Zella.

Percy B. Rigby has succeeded Ralph G. Faust as treasurer of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

The change in the weather, October 20, put new life in the business.

D. U. Augspurger & Sons have purchased another twenty-five-horse-power boiler, having found that the three boilers which were in use were inadequate to heat their plant with the four new houses erected this summer.

J. Nelson is cutting some of the finest chrysanthemums in Peoria. He is shipping large quantities and is being congratulated on the quality.

Mr. Jerabek says he will probably install a new boiler to accommodate the new houses just finished.

Mr. Gunter has a new house under construction.

The Latest Novelties

You don't want to make up exactly the same as you did last year and the year before? Of course not! We are prepared to help you put that touch of originality into your work that will please the people who want something different. To meet this need, we offer the following novelties that you will find most useful in combination with standard wreaths and greens:

Red Asparagus Sprenger

This is natural Sprenger, prepared to make it lasting, and red tipped. It is most effective in combination with beech and magnolia sprays.

Assorted Sprays

With foliage and berries. Selected from a variety of desirable shrubs.

Miniature Oak Leaves

These come in sprays; tiny foliage with acorns; very pretty. When fastened on ruscus wreaths or cypress leaves, they add a touch of originality.

Fern Fronds

In green and silver. Several new varieties. Durable and pleasing.

Minerva Grass

All colors. Very effective in combination.

Beech Sprays

Green, brown, leather-red, and cherry-red. The most popular foliage for use alone or in combination.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Business is not at all what it ought to be. A spell of torrid weather for several days caused extreme dullness and, while cooler conditions again prevail, flowers are not selling well. Roses are coming forward in veritable shoals, many of them of fine quality, but the demand is poor and prices are far from remunerative. Carnations, owing to the heat, have arrived in increasing numbers, but while the quality is steadily improving, prices do not rise, owing to the flood of chrysanthemums. Of the latter the supply of early sorts seems heavier than usual and prices are much lower than a year ago. Pink varieties have been arriving pale in color, owing to the hot weather.

Violets are becoming quite plentiful, both singles and doubles being of good quality. Sweet peas are seen in small lots grown under glass, but are still rather short-stemmed. Lilies have a fairly steady call and lily of the valley is in good demand. Dahlias are about over, but some cosmos remains. In choice flowers some nice gardenias, Bouvardia Humboldtii and a good supply of Cattleya labiata are forthcoming. Pot plant trade remains rather sluggish; probably colder weather will stimulate it.

Club Meeting.

There was a large gathering at the regular monthly meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club October 20, 150 being present. The speaker of the evening was William Downs, vice-president of the club, who spoke interestingly on "Fruit Culture Under Glass." Grapes, peaches, nectarines, strawberries and other fruits were referred to, the best varieties of each being named and their cultural needs spoken of. A good discussion followed the reading of the paper.

A communication was read from the Chrysanthemum Society of America, asking if the club would affiliate with it. Messrs. Cameron, Kennedy and James Wheeler were appointed a committee to consider the proposition.

There were a good number of exhibits. These included J. D. Cockcroft's

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The annual dahlia show of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held on Wednesday evening, October 14, in Pembroke hall, in connection with the regular monthly meeting of the society. There was a fine display of dahlias and other autumn flowers, considering the dry season.

The winners for the different classes were as follows:

Collection of dahlias—First, James Duthie, gardener to E. M. Townsend, Oyster Bay; second, George Wilson, gardener to Mrs. Benjamin Stern, Roslyn.

Collection of single dahlias—First, J. O'Brien, gardener to E. H. Sayres, Glen Cove; second, James Duthie.

Twelve cactus dahlias, distinct—First, James Duthie; second, George Wilson.

Twelve double dahlias—First, James Duthie.

Six dahlias, distinct—First, James Duthie.

At the close of the show the regular meeting was held, with President Jaenicke in the chair. Two honorary members and five active were elected; also three new ones were proposed. President Jaenicke presented the silver medals, won at the summer show, to George Wilson, for roses; Charles Knight, Glen Cove, for sweet peas, and Valentine Cleres, for cut flowers. Mr. Lenker, in an appropriate speech, introduced Mr. Dean, the veteran florist, who gave an interesting talk on floriculture, which was much appreciated. At the end of his remarks he offered a silver cup, to be competed for at next year's dahlia show, which was received with loud applause. Mr. Mense spoke of his visit out west, and was also given good attention.

The awards for points in the regular monthly competition were as follows: H. F. Meyer, pears, 89; George Wilson, chrysanthemums, 86; Valentine Cleres, dahlias, 79.

Cultural certificates were awarded to Paul Reul, cosmos; Alexander Lothian, indoor roses, and Frank Pettoecia, cauliflower.

Honorable mention awards: Paul Reul, lily of the valley and collection of vegetables; Frank Pettoecia, violets and chrysanthemums; Oscar Addor, cosmos, and H. F. Meyer, lettuce.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

they are commonly known, should not be kept in a dust-dry condition during winter. They want just sufficient moisture to prevent them from shriveling, and at the same time keep them from starting into growth. They carry over well in a temperature of 45 to 50 degrees under a bench not too near heating pipes and where they will not get wet feet. A shed where they can be packed in tiered shelves is an ideal place for wintering them.

Fancy Caladiums.

The foliage on caladiums is commencing to die down and it is advisable to gradually reduce the water supply. Do this rather than lay the pots on their sides at once. There are far too many growers who persist in drying gloxinias, begonias, gesneras, fancy caladiums and similar plants as soon as the flowers or foliage show signs of fading. A gradual drying off ensures good, firm bulbs. The other course means that dry rot will probably be the lot of many. Caladiums do not need to be wintered in a higher temperature than 55 to 60 degrees and should not be laid near boilers or hot water pipes.

Ten Weeks' Stock.

The demand for stocks in the markets is somewhat uncertain. They are an easily grown flower and can be produced and sold profitably at a comparatively low price. A batch of seed sown now will give some useful material early in the new year. Sow in flats and pot off singly when large enough to handle. In planting out from flats to the benches, the little plants do not start as when in pots. It therefore pays to pot off singly rather than prick into flats. Such varieties as White Column, Beauty of Nice and several shades of large flowering ten weeks' are all good for forcing. To prevent damping off of seedlings, cover the surface of the flats with sand and keep on a light shelf.

Myosotis.

If you have rooted a few cuttings of myosotis and have them in small pots, plant them along the edges of the benches where your snapdragons or stocks are planted. They will grow and flower well in such a position. There is a moderate demand for bunches of forget-me-nots in winter and early spring, and it can be used to advantage in design work where this particular shade of blue is wanted. M. dissitiflora is the most useful variety for forcing.

It is putting it mildly to say the REVIEW is the most helpful and most instructive paper I have ever read. When one copy is read I can hardly wait for another.—JOHN SPENCER, Decatur, Tex.

SOUTHERN BULB STOCK.

also true that considerable capital and labor are required to conduct the business, and we doubt if it has been overdone to the same extent as the production of carnations, violets or almost any other class of cut flowers.

We think the future will bring lower prices in the bulk of cut flower trade. The wages earned by a large part of our population do not warrant the purchase of any high priced flowers, and that the people want cheap flowers is evidenced by the enormous quantities of carnations, violets, etc., disposed of during market gluts by the street peddlers and stands. Cut flowers during winter have been for the wealthy alone, and profits have been so attractive that immense capital has been invested in producing blooms in the winter. This, of course, has resulted in a large increase of wholesale dealers.

If the dealers would cut their commissions to ten per cent and the retailers would sell their flowers at a much closer margin for cash, the trade would all be benefited. It would result in less competition from new competitors coming in, attracted by the large per cent of profits, and would gradually strengthen those now established in the business.

If the commission men and retailers will not make this concession, and we believe they will not, the result will be that the cream of the trade (the cash sales) and a good volume of all the trade will drift into the department stores, and that will give a worse condition than the present situation.

The southern cut daffodil blooms will surely increase and some outlet will be provided if the regular trade can not or will not handle them. Unfortunately, the first growers put on the market American grown daffodil bulbs not properly grown, or varieties that cannot be successfully produced in America. This closed the markets to our bulbs and we are forced to depend on the cut blooms for most of the profit. The bulbs now being offered on the market, however, by the responsible Virginia growers are guaranteed to give good bloom with usual care and treatment, and as soon as the trade is satisfied as to the good quality and early blooming of our bulbs for forcing, there will be a decrease in cut blooms owing to sale of the large bulbs and replanting of small sets.

We are largely increasing our planting and varying our product, and intend to commence shipping daffodils about March 1, continuing with Darwin tulips, peonies, Spanish and German iris, and closing with gladioli in July. Thus we would give nearly five months of a steady supply of cut flowers, and the trade seems to be favorable to a change from the usual roses, carnations, etc., which are on the market all through the winter.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y.

A Visit to Robert Ballantyne.

The estate owned by Mrs. F. F. Thompson, over which the genial Robert Ballantyne presides, is one of the most beautiful spots imaginable. Overlooking the fine stretch of water composing Canandaigua Lake, the planting has been so arranged as to permit charming views in every direction.

At the time of my visit everything was looking its best. The new Japanese garden, just finished, is considered to be the finest in America. Native experts, assisted by Mr. Ballantyne, have been at work on it for a year. The flower garden was a blaze of color. Every known variety of hardy annual that flourishes here is grown, giving the place an appearance of immense experimental grounds. One variety of aster, Mikado, was the gem of the collection.

To enumerate every good thing would take up too much space here, but those luscious muskmelons were irresistible. The variety is Irondequoit and it is considered to be a gem for both frame and hothouse. It is not a new variety and deserves wide cultivation. Creole Beauty is another grand sort. Chasselle's Vibert is a fine white grape for indoors. Orchids are grown extensively. A clever contrivance for cypripediums is a square tub with slats placed one inch apart, the tub standing on legs and thus allowing a free circulation of air. The plants are in perfect health.

Among bedding plants, the old favorite single General Grant is the most popular geranium. Jean Viaud is another excellent variety. M.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—Andrew McCrea's store, on Meadow street, is said to be noted for the tasteful, artistic character of the window displays.

BROOKLINE, MASS.—Olmsted Bros., the landscape architects, have planned many changes on the De Forest estate, at Cold Spring Harbor, L. I. The contemplated improvements include a large Italian garden, pergolas, fountains and water gardens, with a complete change in the drives and the system of planting.

FLORAL PARK, N. Y.

In 1874, when John Lewis Childs located on the Hempstead plains and turned a portion of that unsightly sedge into a flower garden, which grew larger every year, he was building better than he anticipated, for from the foundation upon which he only hoped to build a successful business has developed a beautiful and largely self-supporting village. At present there are not as many large fields of flowers at Floral Park as formerly, for the reason that the town is growing fast and the land became too valuable as residential sites, and Mr. Childs thought it best to purchase more land further east. He therefore secured about 600 acres at St. James and Stony Brook, and nearly 200 acres at Franklin Square and Garden City. But there are enough flowers grown at Floral Park each year to maintain its reputation as the floral village. Last season Mr. Childs sold over 3,000,000 gladiolus bulbs, which were shipped to all parts of the world. Some of his special stock he has grown on his place at Pasadena, Cal., which he calls the California Floral Park. He has a four-story brick building here, 80x100 feet, which is used for storing gladioli and other bulbs, but still its capacity is barely sufficient to meet the requirements. His seed building, in which the offices and retail packing and mailing departments are located, is entirely covered on the outside with Boston ivy, which makes it one of the prettiest office buildings located on Long Island. Ex-Postmaster Arthur H. Goldsmith is general manager for Mr. Childs, while Isaac S. Hendrickson has charge of the wholesale department.

The publishing department, where Mr. Childs has all of his printing done, is run under the name of the Mayflower Publishing Co., and occupies a two-story brick building, in which is installed the machinery necessary for turning out catalogues. Major John F. Klein is manager of the printing department.

In the department of floriculture is J. Roscoe Fuller & Co., who do a general catalogue business and ship quantities of bulbs, seeds and plants to all parts of the United States, as well as to foreign countries. Frederick Cowperthwait is manager for the firm.

The cut flower business is handled by C. H. Allen, Joel G. Hayden, Charles D. Stryker and William Siebrecht. They grow carnations principally. C. L. Allen, who is one of the pioneer seedsmen of Long Island, has an office and storeroom in Floral Park, but has most of his seed grown in the eastern section of the island.

THE third shipment of Japanese longi-florum bulbs reached Chicago last week.

PROF. W. F. MASSEY comments that Maule's Earliest and Earliana tomatoes seem to him to be identical. The former was introduced first.

CHARLES P. GUELPH, of the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y., is at present making his headquarters at Columbus, O., Chittenden hotel.

W. W. RAWSON & Co., Boston, have been exhibiting largely at local and nearby fairs and flower shows, believing it good advertising for both flower and vegetable seed departments and the plant department.

THERE is said to be a wide range in the deliveries made by the different growers of peas for the canning trade, some delivering only twenty-five per cent, while others are delivering from fifty to sixty per cent.

A SUMMER visitor to the trial grounds of Watkins & Simpson, London, says it was notable the vigorous manner in which selection is carried out in flower seed crops grown there, and the resulting improvement in the strains.

C. A. TENNY is the manager of the Horr-Warner Co., one of the largest growers of onions on the muck lands of Wayne and Medina counties in Ohio. About 200 bushels of onions are planted each year for seeds, the selection of bulbs for planting being made from the general crop as the crop is being harvested.

AT Chicago, October 20, timothy seed was steady. October closed at $3.50 bid, and March $3.75 bid and $3.82½ asked. Country lots, $2.30 to $3.40. Clover seed was firmer at $7.75 for October and $6 to $7.50 for cash lots. At Toledo, clover seed was, cash, $4.72½; October, $4.70; December, $4.77½; March, $4.90; No. 2, $4.52; No. 3, $4.40; rejected, $4.25. Alsike, prime, $8.80.

THE argument that because the purity of fertilizers can and has been successfully required by law to be guaranteed, the same guarantee should be required for seeds, is a weak one. Fertilizers are the product of men and machinery; seeds are the product of nature. There would be no need for any sort of a guarantee if it were not a characteristic of human nature to want to get something for nothing, or as near to it as possible.

A VERDICT has been rendered in favor of the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, amounting to $255.25, against the Big Four railroad, growing out of a suit for damages to a shipment of onion sets made a year or two ago over the line of the defendant. The shipment was sent to an Indiana point and upon arrival at destination the consignee declined to accept the shipment, claiming that the onion sets has been damaged by delay. Thereupon the Leonard Seed Co. instructed the railroad to return the shipment and verdict was given for the full amount of the claim.

THE ASTER SEED CROP.

Writing under date of October 17, James Vick's Sons, Rochester, say:

"We expect to harvest at least an average crop of aster seed. The early varieties are already gathered. The seed of these is plump, the conditions at harvest time insure good vitality, and the yield is satisfactory. Our large acreage of Branching varieties is maturing rather slowly, but we expect to harvest the earlier plantings this month. With the exception of about two acres flooded in July, the losses of plants are trifling and we have had fine weather for the seed to set and mature. The use in several of our main plantings of strains that we have been breeding up for some time will cut down the yield somewhat, as the improved strains have the main branches practically free from lateral buds, and the flowers more double than formerly. Still, the conditions of growth are so favorable that we expect to be able to meet all our requirements.

"Our other seed crops—a few acres of Phlox Drummondii and a number of specialties in flowers and vegetables—have nearly all yielded satisfactory crops and have been harvested under ideal conditions."

TOMATOES FOR CANNING.

By far the larger portion of the acreage devoted to tomatoes is for the purpose of supplying fruit for the canning factories, and it is the demand of the canneries which, more than any other, has given the great impetus to tomato culture in the United States. Canned tomatoes as an article of trade is said to owe its origin to Harrison W. Crosby, who made his first venture in 1848, while steward of Lafayette College, Easton, Pa. There was a ready demand for the goods, and, with increased supply and improved machinery the cost has been greatly reduced. With this reduced cost the output of the factories has increased to an almost incredible extent. The total output of the United States for 1887 was about 3,000,000 cases, of twenty-four cans each. In 1894 the output was nearly doubled; while in 1904 the trade had grown to 9,000,000 cases, and in 1907 the pack reported was approximately 13,000,000 cases. This year has not been a favorable one for tomatoes, but the pack doubtless was as large as in 1907.

VALLEY PIPS.

The following extracts from the Deutsche Gartner Zeitung show how varied are the reports from the centers of lily of the valley culture in Germany, and the expectations of the cultivators in regard to the crop of the present year:

"The lily of the valley trade in the autumn of last year was good, high prices were paid for crowns, and they were soon disposed of. The promise for the present year is middling good. The inquiry has been equal to that of 1907."

—H. D., Schulp, Holstein.

"The harvest of 1907 in this neighborhood was unfavorable. The price here, as in previous years, stood at 20 to 25 marks per thousand. If at length dry weather ensue no premature bloomers will appear, and there will then be a prospect of satisfactory ware; but that the crop will be an abundant one is doubtful, for an examination made in July and the early part of August showed that in my grounds not many flowering buds (crowns) were discoverable. The future crop of good crowns that will be harvested this autumn is already in firm hands at the same prices as those of previous years."—O. G., Grabow-on-the-Oder.

"The practice of keeping the surplus of the lily of the valley crowns for longer than one year in artificially cool storage has greatly increased since 1892, when it began. Last year too many crowns were stored, with the result that large numbers were kept for two summers, and as a consequence they had no value; last spring much was left in the stores. The price has fallen from year to year and this season it is not likely to advance, seeing that the condition of the purchasing public in general compels it to be extra careful in the matter of articles of luxury. Opinions in regard to the present year's harvest differ considerably. Following on a continuous wet period, lasting to the middle of the month of May, a great drought lasted till St. John's day, which did not particularly favor the development of blossoms. Still the harvest of crowns, in spite of minor exceptions, will be too large."—H. B., Acterschlag, near Bargedorf.

"Last fall good crowns for export were, as a result of the weak crops, very scarce, and higher prices were paid than in some previous years. Planting crowns were from the same cause not to be obtained. The lily of the valley trade in Stettin was languid the entire winter. This was chiefly due to the general lack of money in the community and the retarded competing with the fresh forced crowns. Still it must be allowed that owing to the retarding method, the lily of the valley crop is disposed of to a considerable proportion, and that the retarded crowns are brought on at a season when fresh forced lily of the valley are not obtainable. The spring and summer weather has been favorable, and a good harvest of crowns is expected."—R. G., Gartz-on-the-Oder.

WORK IN HOLLAND.

The Holland bulb growers have been favored by unusually fine weather for their annual planting and the work has been pushed along earlier than usual. No accurate information is available as to the quantities planted, but of narcissi it is undoubtedly less than usual, for there has been little profit in these the last few years, and in spite of lower prices made to clear there is a surplus this season. Hyacinths have sold out clean and the growers are anxious to get a large crop in 1909. Contrary to the expectations of some who were disturbed by the cutting down of orders by forcers in America, and by slack business conditions in other countries, tulips have cleaned up well at satisfactory prices, only a few of the higher-priced sorts being left in the hands of most of the growers. Shipments, of course, are now at an end.

Holland commenced to export bulbs in considerable quantities at about the middle of the eighteenth century, and the industry has not only increased continuously since that time, but recent returns prove that the volume of trade is greater now than in any previous year. Exact returns have been published since 1897, in which year the total exports were 5,701,798 kilograms (kilogramme = 2.2046 pounds). In 1907 the exports were 15,277,400 kilograms. According to the published figures, Great Britain and Ireland take forty per cent of the exports, Germany twenty-five per cent, the United States eighteen per cent, the northern European countries nine per cent, and France and other Latin countries five per cent. It is estimated that there are upwards of 2,000 growers of bulbs, and 150 of these are exporters, who are organized as the Dutch Bulb Exporters' Association, of which S. Kruyff is president.

AURORA, ILL.—W. B. Davis, the well-known vegetable forcer, is recovering from his recent illness, but his physician tells him he must take things easy for awhile.

GEORGE STEWART, of Sloatsburg, N. Y., who is a successful grower of mushrooms, cultivates them under his greenhouse benches. The material for the beds is formed into ridges, one on each side of the house. The beds are covered with marsh hay, in order to retain the moisture and regulate the temperature.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—Boston cucumbers, $3 to $5 box; mushrooms, 25c to 50c lb.; tomatoes, 8c to 12c lb.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—Leaf lettuce, indoor grown, 15c to 20c; cucumbers, 50c to $1; parsley, 8c to 10c doz. bunches; mushrooms, 15c to 50c lb.

DWARF CHAMPION TOMATO.

A writer in the English Gardeners' Magazine introduces Dwarf Champion as "America's best tomato" and says in part: This tomato is largely grown in the different states, but, as far as I am aware, it is but little known in the British Isles. Extended trial has given me a good idea of its qualities. In growth it is distinct from any other form I have met with. Short and sturdy, close-jointed, with thick, massive leaves, it forms a conspicuous object, whether utilized for glass or outdoor culture.

The fruits are large, about seven to the bunch, fleshy, and with fewer seeds than any other variety I know. In color it is a bright magenta-red, different to the crimson-hued forms we usually grow, and connoisseurs to whom fruits have been submitted have stated that it is the best-flavored tomato they have tasted.

For low houses, where the ordinary varieties seem too rampant, this tomato should find a place, and for outdoor culture it is worth a good trial. Under both phases of culture it has proved itself a meritorious cropper. It cannot be classed as an early tomato, but for maincrop purposes it should serve well.

GROWERS TO ORGANIZE.

About September 1 E. A. Dunbar, secretary and sales manager of the Ashtabula Lettuce Growers' Association, suggested the formation of a national organization of greenhouse vegetable growers. The suggestion looked good and by way of finding out what other growers thought of the plan letters were sent to a dozen or more of the more prominent growers in different sections asking their opinion. Their answers were so favorable that it was decided that the only thing necessary to make such an organization a success was to make a start. Therefore the following call was issued:

Believing that a national organization of growers of vegetables in greenhouses will be of great benefit to all engaged in this branch of horticulture, by the dissemination of useful information through personal contact and an exchange of

PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, ORE.—A greenhouse is being erected in Columbia park, on the Peninsula. It will cost $3,800.

A STOCKTON ESTABLISHMENT.

Schmitz & Dobner do a nice business at Stockton, Cal., where they have a store and city office at 26 South California street and greenhouses, and nursery on North street, between Sutter and California streets. With telephone connection, the two places are in close touch. In the accompanying illustration the range of glass is shown on the left, with a cloth house at the right. The nursery covers several acres and both under glass and in the open a general line of stock is grown for retail trade. It will interest eastern growers, perhaps, to note that Stockton is in about the latitude of Richmond, Va., and a much greater variety of stock is grown than is handled by the average florist on the Atlantic coast.

FALL PROSPECTS.

The rain, which has made its appearance in the form of a few showers in the central portions of the Pacific coast, has awakened a feeling among the growers that the nursery season has about opened for the fall and there is much speculation as to what the next few months will bring forth.

special locality. Outside of these there is little to report, for the planters are buying sparingly of miscellaneous sorts. Regarding prices asked, will remark that they are cheaper than those of last season, although there was a great difference between the figures asked at the early part of last season and those at which the same qualities of stock could be bought when the season was well advanced. From a fruit-grower's standpoint there is little to encourage the heavy planting of trees as an investment, for the low prices obtained for fruit, both in the open market and at canneries, have been a discouragement.

Grape vines have not been, except in a few instances, great money-makers. The low prices offered by the wineries and the difficulty in disposing of raisins at a fair profit, have united to keep the demand for grape vines down.

Along other lines the demand has been light, but it is yet early in the season and there may be a great awakening that will make the season one of the best in recent years.

Fall bulbs were moving slowly, but the last few days have made a great change in the prospects and, with the advent of rain, we may expect a wholesale clearing out of bulb stocks in the next few weeks.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The welcome rain has made its appearance and every one feels that its freshening qualities may bring the retail florists a share of the generally reviving trade. There is, owing to the tremendous number of mums that are being brought into town, a slump in prices in other lines of stock. An effort had been made by a majority of the growers to keep quotations well up on the new crop of roses and carnations, but there has been such an excess of stock cut during the last two weeks that prices have gone to smash and the retailers can practically coast nurseries, it appears that there have been a fair number of orders booked for special articles. Commencing first with the growers of fruit trees, the demands are heavy for certain kinds of apples, peaches and apricots, such as are planted for some particular purpose in a have been some large orders placed by parties who are buying up large tracts of land and subdividing them for small homes for new settlers. In these cases the plantings have principally been of sidewalk trees and other suitable stock that will make an immediate showing.

make their own figures. The weather during the next few weeks will regulate this to a large extent, for if it is to be warm and salubrious the chrysanthemum crop, which is of large proportions, will keep other lines of stock from getting up the line.

Violets are abundant and are selling well, probably better than anything else. Sweet peas are scarce and the public has almost ceased calling for them.

Business in a general way is only fair, with spurts here and there of funeral work.

Various Notes.

J. J. Kegley, manager of Gill's Floral Depot, Oakland, is on a week's visit to Olympia, Wash. He was called there by the death of his niece October 12.

Along other lines the demand has been light, but it is yet early in the season and there may be a great awakening that will make the season one of the best in recent years.

Fall bulbs were moving slowly, but the last few days have made a great change in the prospects and, with the advent of rain, we may expect a wholesale clearing out of bulb stocks in the next few weeks.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The welcome rain has made its appearance and every one feels that its freshening qualities may bring the retail florists a share of the generally reviving trade. There is, owing to the tremendous number of mums that are being brought into town, a slump in prices in other lines of stock. An effort had been made by a majority of the growers to keep quotations well up on the new crop of roses and carnations, but there has been such an excess of stock cut during the last two weeks that prices have gone to smash and the retailers can practically coast nurseries, it appears that there have been a fair number of orders booked for special articles. Commencing first with the growers of fruit trees, the demands are heavy for certain kinds of apples, peaches and apricots, such as are planted for some particular purpose in a have been some large orders placed by parties who are buying up large tracts of land and subdividing them for small homes for new settlers. In these cases the plantings have principally been of sidewalk trees and other suitable stock that will make an immediate showing.

make their own figures. The weather during the next few weeks will regulate this to a large extent, for if it is to be warm and salubrious the chrysanthemum crop, which is of large proportions, will keep other lines of stock from getting up the line.

Violets are abundant and are selling well, probably better than anything else. Sweet peas are scarce and the public has almost ceased calling for them.

Business in a general way is only fair, with spurts here and there of funeral work.

Various Notes.

J. J. Kegley, manager of Gill's Floral Depot, Oakland, is on a week's visit to Olympia, Wash. He was called there by the death of his niece October 12.

J. B. Boland, the well known Kearney street florist, has recovered from his recent severe illness.

Miss I. M. Adams has opened a retail establishment at 2137 Center street, Berkeley.

M. A. McCowen, who has been connected with the Clarke Bros., of Oakland, has departed on a trip to his old home at Atlanta, Ga.

Carlson & Sandkuhle are erecting a show house for greenhouse plants, 15x50 feet in size, at their nurseries in Piedmont.

F. Lobel is building a one-story structure to be devoted to the retail trade on his Piedmont avenue property at Oakland.

OMAHA.

At the annual meeting of the Omaha Florists' Club, held in the city hall, it was decided to give a flower show in Omaha next year, if it is possible to get enough people interested in the project. Several members of the club will attend the national flower show in Chicago, November 6 to 14, and it is hoped that they will be able then to make arrangements for the Omaha show.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, L. Henderson; vice-president, G. Swoboda; secretary, J. H. Hadkinson; treasurer, G. Soransen; trustees, P. B. Floth, A. Hooze and O. Herman.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.
Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., O. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y.
The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

It is reported that Start Bros. Nursery Co., Louisiana, Mo., is planning to establish a nursery in the Yakima valley, in the state of Washington.

W. F. HEIKES, of Huntsville, Ala., manager of the Huntsville Wholesale Nursery Co., was in Biloxi, Miss., for several days recently and was the guest of J. A.
Brodie, manager of the nursery farm to the north of the bay, which is a branch of the Huntsville establishment.

WILLIAM A. PETERSON, of the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, who recently sold about forty-six acres of his property to the drainage trustees, has made partial amends for the loss of that ground by purchasing twenty acres at the southeast corner of Foster and Kedzie avenues, for $20,000.

THE nurseries at McClenny, Fla., namely, the Griffin Bros. Co., the Barber-Frink Co., and the Glen Saint Mary Nursery Co., report an exceptionally bright outlook for this shipping season.
Already they have orders booked running up to over $100,000, and each is busy preparing for fall shipments.

LILACS WANTED.

Will you tell me from whom I can purchase the lilacs mentioned, and some of them illustrated, in the REVIEW for October 15? I would like to buy some of the best and newer varieties, but would prefer to get them on their own roots.

De Ruyter, N. Y. J. H. SCHAFER.

course, on the extent of the business transacted, although it will be well to make generous allowance for an enlarged business. And the builder must bear in mind that it is fully as important to keep excessive heat from the plants as to prevent their being subjected to too low a temperature. In fact, it often happens that more stock suffers from heat than from cold. M.

PEONIES.

I have some peonies which were planted three years ago in deep, rich soil, where they get plenty of water. But so far the clumps have not produced any blooms, although they have had the best of care. Last spring a number of buds appeared, but dried and wilted before opening. The foliage also gradually turns brown and dies, but comes up the next year, apparently strong and healthy. They are planted in a field where they get the full sunlight. Would you advise transplanting them under trees, where they receive partial shade? The sunlight is very strong and bright here in New Mexico. K. C. C.

It is to be doubted if you will succeed in growing and blooming peonies satisfactorily in your state, New Mexico. Could you be certain that they were sufficiently moist at the root, they would no doubt withstand the hot sun. Dryness will prove fatal to them, however. You might try them in partial shade and if you can mulch them and afford occasional waterings, you will possibly be repaid by some flowers.

GRAPE VINES.

I intend to plant grape vines on a south slope in New Mexico. What sort of soil should be used and when and how should they be treated after being put in? K. C. C.

Allow the grape vines ten feet apart each way. You can tie them, either to posts separately, or as many prefer, a three-wire trellis. Early spring planting for these is to be preferred to fall. Prune back the shoots to two or three eyes to promote stronger growths. Keep the ground well cultivated during the active growing season. One strong shoot is sufficient for each plant the first season. Remove any extra and weak growths. Plant varieties which succeed well in the southern states, as many of the best northern ones do indifferently there.

The character of the soil matters less than most people would imagine. Some grow them well in heavy clay, others equally well in sandy or gravelly soil. It is better to use fertilizers rather than barnyard manure. The latter makes the land too rich and keeps the plants growing longer than they ought to. Such fertilizers as cotton-seed meal added to Kanit and ground bone are suitable.

Pinch the main shoot once to make it branch the first season.

AZALEAS

New Importations==Now Ready

IF you have not already secured all the Azaleas that you want for Christmas forcing or later, and Easter flowering, you will find it to your advantage to purchase at once, while the plants can be forwarded by freight, thus saving in cost of transportation, as later, after cold weather, plants will have to be shipped by express, and as Azaleas are heavy, it is to your advantage to order them now and have them shipped while they can travel safely by freight. Besides this, you can secure the varieties wanted before assortments are broken. Plants are in fine shape, well budded, and we offer the best commercial varieties, as follows:

Apollo, Bernard Andreas Alba, Deutsche Perle, Empress of India, Mme Jos. Vervaene, Mme. Van der Cruyssen, Mrs. Petrick, Niobe, Paul Weber, Prof. Wolters, Simon Mardner, and Vervaeneana.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

There is a general increase in the volume of business, as the flower lovers are moving back to town. Some important weddings and funerals were factors last week. At the funeral of Dr. Gilman, president emeritus of Johns Hopkins University, who was buried at Norwich, Conn., there were designs estimated at $1,000 in value.

The chrysanthemum will for the next few weeks monopolize attention and, from present indications, the crop will be a large one and of fine quality. There was an enormous quantity of Polly Rose and Monrovia at the Florists' Exchange on Tuesday. There seems to be no reason why so many early mums should be planted, instead of late ones, as they always come when there is so much outdoor stuff on the market.

Violets continue to improve in quality, and prices are a trifle better. There seems to be no good reason why they should not be grown and sold on a paying basis, though the wailing Jeremiahs seem determined to paint it black instead of blue. Carnations are arriving in large lots. Roses could be bought on the street at 5 cents per dozen, and cosmos at 15 cents per hundred.

Various Notes.

Thos. H. Paterson has leased his greenhouses to Guy Strickland, who was formerly with Robert Graham for seven years. He will grow cut flowers.

The Griffith & Turner Co. has opened a large warehouse on North street, so as to be convenient to the railroad.

Otto Fiedler, of Albert Fiedler & Co., was married to Miss Minnie Ingert, October 12.

Israel Rosnosky and A. Herrmann, of New York, were in Baltimore last week, looking after orders.

Mr. Thomas, of 316 Saratoga street, was elected a member of the Gardeners' & Florists' Club at the last meeting.

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—The Taska & May Co. is erecting a greenhouse for Henry Finger, to cost $1,500.

ATHOL, MASS.—George W. Sutherland is making many improvements at his greenhouses. A large boiler has been installed and also a gasoline engine which will pump into a tank with 5,000 gallons capacity.

THE NEW PINK ROSE,

Mrs. Marshall Field,

to be disseminated in 1909. 2½-in. plants, $30.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000. All grafted stock. Write now to get early delivery.

The Market.

There have been several showers since the drought and there is no scarcity of rain at present. It is cold—regular fall weather. Outdoor palms, porch-boxes and vases have been taken in, to avoid freezing. Chrysanthemums are getting more plentiful. They are used in profusion at Hallowe'en parties, which have already commenced to be in vogue. October weddings are becoming almost as popular as June weddings in this section. There will be several society weddings in the city this month.

Various Notes.

Robert Wallis has accepted a position as rose grower in Terre Haute, Ind.

Mr. Hall, representing Reed & Keller, New York, was in the city last week.

Miss Minna Baur, sister of A. J. and G. H. Baur, was married Saturday, October 17, to Lewis B. Perkins, of Welland, Ont. Mr. Perkins is chemist for the Ontario Iron & Steel Works. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins left Saturday evening for Welland, where they will make their future home.

Virginia, the infant daughter of Lloyd Skelton, was buried Sunday afternoon. None but white flowers were used, principally roses and carnations.

B. P.

KUTZTOWN, PA.—Fred N. Baer has almost completed his new greenhouses and is now installing a heating system. Part of the space will be used for vegetables. His carnations look promising.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.

A pretty home wedding took place Monday evening, October 12, at the residence of John T. Withers, when Miss Bertha Marie de Greiff became the bride of M. Vanderhave. Miss de Greiff arrived Monday morning, on the steamship Rotterdam, from Apeldoorn, Holland, and the ceremony was solemnized in her native tongue by the Rev. Dr. Fagg, of New York city. Mr. Vanderhave is a graduate of the botanical school of Holland, and has spent several years in the East Indies, Belgium, Germany, etc., before coming to America. He is at present superintendent of the Shatemuc Nurseries, Barrytown, N. Y. Everybody was made happy with an elaborate supper, after which Mr. and Mrs. Vanderhave left for New York. Among the out-of-town guests present, in the trade, were Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Wise, of Boston.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

The Yuess Gardens Co., of Newburgh, N. Y., is the first in the local market with yellow chrysanthemums. Monrovia, Glory of the Pacific and Polly Rose make a trio that sells at sight. Ernest Preston succeeded Donald Cameron some time ago as grower, and is showing excellent results. The bulb department is rushing out orders. President Harry Cathcart is making plans for more storage capacity. Walter Mott is busy on literature for the call of spring. Quite an idea prevails with some market gardeners in this section—the sowing of radishes with turnips. As the radishes mature early they are drawn, allowing the turnips to enlarge.

The Schaefer Floral Co., of Newburgh, is making special sales on Boston ferns. Scottii is popular and, being well grown, pushes the old favorite rather hard. Whitmani sells well.

Lewis Wood, of Wood Bros., Fishkill, N. Y., says his only regret is that he has not planted a larger area with the two gems, Rhea Reid and My Maryland, which he considers the best roses yet sent out. They cannot begin to supply the demand for the blooms. M.

READING, PA.—John H. Kepner, of Harrisburg, proprietor of the Penn Flower Shop, is improving his Reading store.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—At a meeting of the local Florists' Society September 19 the organization voted to take active part in the city beautiful movement and authorized the publication in its name of a list of plants well adapted to special purposes in this climate. Planting directions are given.

Prepare for Thanksgiving and the Holidays.

We lead the country in Araucarias. Have been in the lead in the past; have it now and shall lead in the future.

We have houses full of choice Excelsa robusta compacta and Excelsa glauca; enough to supply the entire country.

Will you pay 50 per cent to 100 per cent more by buying from others who are not specialists? Hope not; the wise are on guard. We are going to sell all of them and without drummers. By jingo, we must sell them; an elephant for 40c, 50c and 60c; a jumbo for 75c to $1.00; and a holy terror in size for $1.25 to $1.50.

TAKE NOTICE!

Plants have grown considerably and are now fully 10 per cent to 20 per cent bigger than advertised below.

Four houses full of choice Boston, Whitmani and Scottii Ferns, 5, 5½, 6 and 7-in., all pot-grown, raised in sunny houses (not white-washed), which will produce stiff fronds; never were so fine as this year. Next on the program we carry a fine stock of choice Kentia Palms, Rubbers, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, etc., which stand a challenge with those of all the notable growers of America and Europe.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 tiers, 10 to 12 inches high, 40c; 5½-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 to 4 tiers, 12 to 15 inches high, 50c; 6-in. pots, 3 to 4 years old, 3, 4, 5 to 6 tiers, 16, 18, 20 to 22 inches high, 60c, 75c to $1.00 each.

Araucaria Robusta Compacta, 6-in. pots, 3 years old, 3 tiers, fine, beautiful plants, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, specimen plants; spring, 1907, importation; suitable for lawns or porches, 5 to 6 years old, 7-in. pots, 5 tiers, 25, 30, 35 to 40 inches high, same in width, beautiful plants, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 to $4.00 each.

Boston and Scottii ferns, 5-in., 30c to 35c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c and 50c; 7-in. pots, as big as a bushel basket, 75c to $1.00. Scottii, 8 to 9-in. pans, made-up of 3 plants, 75c to $1.00 per pan.

Whitmani, 4-in., 20c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c and 50c; 7-in. pots, made up or as big as a bushel basket, only $1.00, worth $1.50; 8-in. pans, three large plants in a pan, 75c; 9-in. pans, 3 large plants in a pan, $1.00. We have a big stock of these varieties and they are pot, not bench, grown. Amerpohlii, 5-in., 30c, 35c to 40c.

Kentia Belmoreana, 5½ to 5½-in. pots, 25 to 30 inches high, 50c, 60c and 75c; 4-in., 20 inches high, 35c to 40c.

Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, a large one, about 40 inches high, in the center, surrounded by three smaller ones, $4.00 each.

Kentia Forsteriana, 6 to 7-in. pots, 36 inches high, $2.00; specimen, 7-in., 40 to 50 inches high, $2.50 to $3.00; 6-in., 30 inches high, $1.50; 6-in., 25 inches high, $1.00; 6-in., 20 to 25 inches high, 75c; 5 to 5½-in., 50c.

HOW TO MAKE MONEY GROWING

VIOLETS

BY GEORGE SALTFOED.

The cultural directions are clear and concise and every detail of successful growing is covered in this neatly printed, freely illustrated pamphlet of 48 pages.

It is said that this book, more than any other agency, has contributed to the wonderful expansion of the Hudson River violet industry the past three years.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The arrival of warm weather brought an increase in stock of all kinds. Prices weakened somewhat, but there was no great overstock. Roses have shown a marked improvement of late, and are now of good quality as well as quantity. Carnations are of a better grade than ever before seen here at this time of the year. Mums are plentiful and good, at from 6 cents to 20 cents. Double violets are received daily and are moving well. Some extra fine valley is to be had at 3 cents and 4 cents. Greens of all kinds are plentiful and sell well, except smilax, which is moving slowly.

Various Notes.

A visit to John Kirchner found everything in fine shape. All hands were busy with funeral work, among which was a pillow of red and white Kaiserin roses, which was fine.

F. W. Zeichman has repaired and painted his whole plant and the place is in better shape than it has been for some time. The stock is also looking well.

Charles Bartells, of North Olmsted, is sending in a fine cut of carnations at present.

The F. R. Williams Co. is cutting large quantities of White Enchantress and Beacon carnations, which are picked up at sight.

Mr. Rock has bought the retail business of Henry Eickhoff and will carry on the trade as done by the former owner.

ROCKFORD, ILL.—Henry Mueller, formerly of Cincinnati, O., has purchased H. S. Morton's greenhouses, on Chapin place, and will continue the business there.

LOWELL, MASS.—Swanson & Dellgren have made thorough repairs in their greenhouses and have erected some additional benches. Most of their space is used for carnations, but they also grow violets and sweet peas.

The Dahlia.

By LAWRENCE K. PEACOCK. A practical treatise on the habits, characteristics, cultivation and history of the dahlia with a descriptive list of all the best varieties. Copiously and elegantly illustrated. 30 cents

Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual.

By ELMER D. SMITH. Revised edition. A complete practical treatise, concise directions for every stage of the work of propagator and grower. The result of 22 years' experience. Fully illustrated. 40 cents

The Florists' Manual.

By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

The Rose—Its Cultivation, Varieties, etc.

By H. B. ELLWANGER. Directions for cultivation—for planting, pruning, propagation, the treatment of diseases and insect enemies—particularly valuable for its classification. Alphabetical and descriptive list of nine hundred and fifty-six varieties. Cloth. $1.25

Greenhouse Construction.

By PROF. L. R. TAFT. A complete manual on the building, heating, ventilating and arrangement of greenhouses, and the construction of hotbeds, frames and plant pits. Lucid descriptions and 118 diagrams and illustrations make every detail clear to the amateur and professional gardener and florist. Cloth. 218 pages. $1.50

Mushrooms—How to Grow Them.

By WM. FALCONER. This is the most practical work on the subject ever written, and the only book on growing mushrooms published in America. The author describes how he grows mushrooms and how they are grown for profit by the leading market gardeners, and for home use by the most successful private growers. Engravings drawn from nature expressly for this work. Cloth. $1.00

The Pruning Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth. 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

Greenhouse Heating.

THE REVIEW is glad to answer in this department any inquiry with regard to greenhouse heating. Give all the details of your problem, not only as a guide to an intelligent answer, but so that others similarly situated may derive a benefit.

SMALL PROPAGATING HOUSE.

What, in your opinion, is the cheapest way to heat a small greenhouse, about 15x20, which I am putting up beside my dwelling house? It is intended principally for geranium cuttings. I have no other greenhouses near it. I have a small potting shed, 9x12, attached to one end, and, though I never heard of its being done, I thought of trying to heat it with a stove in the shed, or in the dwelling house itself. Would this work? What would you suggest? I am located in southern Canada.

A. K. B.

I doubt if you will be able to maintain a satisfactory temperature in your propagating house by using a stove. A small hot water heating plant would, it seems to me, be preferable to anything else for such a place. If the greenhouse is a lean-to attached to the dwelling, the heater might be located in the cellar of the house. It is often a greater problem to heat a small plant of this character than a large one.

L. C. C.

AN UNDERGROUND SMOKE FLUE.

I have a brick smokestack, eighteen feet high. The inside opening is 12x12 inches. I should like to change my flue, because my neighbors complain of too much smoke. Could I run a 10-inch flue underground for forty feet and then run this flue into the chimney of my dwelling house, where the flue is 9x9 inches? My boiler at present draws so hard that the flames come out four feet if I have the dampers open. I intend to have my underground pipes arranged so that I can clean them out every month if necessary.

H. W.

I have never seen a plan of this sort in operation, but it appears to me to be the same in principle as the flue carried around a greenhouse, and such flues,

HERE IS ONE SAMPLE OF THE SCORES OF UNSOLICITED CERTIFICATES WE GET FROM OUR CUSTOMERS.

KROESCHELL BROS. CO., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs: I wish to write you a few lines concerning your No. 2 boiler which we received last fall. Your boiler proved to be excellent in material and workmanship. It did the work very nicely last winter with a small amount of coal. Others used up more than a carload while we used only 15 tons all winter, including what we used in the dwelling. Every one in our neighborhood has got a Kroeschell boiler. As soon as the other greenhouse men saw it they took a liking to it and now they've all got one. We speak well of your boiler to all who see it. The Kroeschell is our favorite if we ever get another.

Yours Respectfully,

JOHN KOENIG, Box 88, Valley Crossing, O.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 1, 1908.

NOT CAST IRON—Has thin waterways. Heats quickly. It is the most efficient, safest and most economical boiler built. Very powerful. 15 sizes, heating from the smallest greenhouse up to 50,000 square feet of glass to 50 degrees, at 15 degrees below zero. Prices and catalogue on application.

KROESCHELL BROS. CO., 51 Erie St., Chicago

greenhouse accidents must be included the occasional bursting of a rusty or defective pipe. For experienced florists that statement may contain no information, as they already know all about the peculiarities, the weaknesses and perversities, of heating pipes.

But, though nearly all florists may know that such sudden leaks are likely to occur, and that they are capable of causing much annoyance and damage, perhaps many of them do not know how easily, quickly and effectively the leaks can be repaired, without aid from plumber or pipe fitter, if the proper appliances are at hand. And in the case of an uncontrollable leak it might be disastrous to wait for the arrival of a plumber or pipe fitter; such delay might be the most expensive phase of the whole operation.

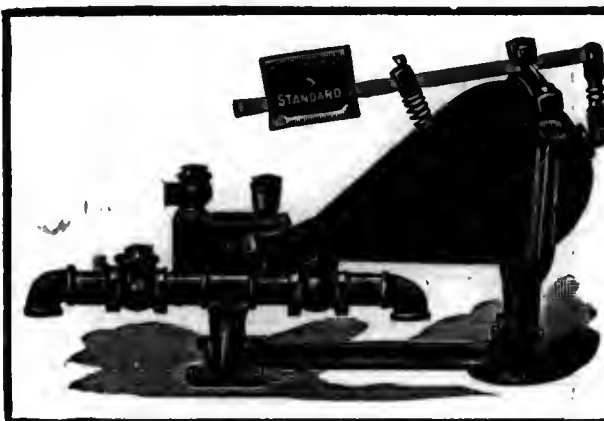

For use in such emergencies there is no better device than the Emergency Pipe Clamp, and every greenhouse owner should have it on hand in sizes to fit every pipe on the place. The clamp is as simple as it is effective, consisting of two malleable halves, hinged on one side and fastened with two bolts on the other side, and so constructed that a leak can hardly occur where it is not applicable. Each clamp is fitted with a suitable piece of packing. If the split to be mended is a long one, two or more clamps can be used with one piece of packing.

This device is among the steam specialties manufactured by James McCrea & Co., Chicago.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

Business continues good, though it is showing weakness in spots. Mums are coming in heavily. The demand is good, but the price took a drop last week and mums which were selling for $2.50 and $3 per dozen were cut to $1.25 and $1.50. A few of the midseason varieties bring $2 to $3 right readily. Roses show symptoms of being a glut. Carnations alone continue scarce, and more of the better qualities could be used to advantage. Lilies have been good property. Valley has been doing well also.

The Standard Steam Trap

is acknowledged the best for the florist because it is durable, and does its work without trouble and annoyance, saving its cost by the economy in coal bills.

LINCOLN, ILL., January 8, 1906.

THE JOHN DAVIS COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

GENTLEMEN:—You can strongly and unhesitatingly recommend the "Eclipse" piston type reducing valve to florists. We have two, purchased of you last year. We would not have them out for double their cost, and find them as sensitive as a watch. We will be in Chicago soon to take up the vacuum system with you.

Yours truly,

The conclave of Ohio Knights Templar, which was held here last week, brought in many thousands of people and helped the flower business to a considerable extent. Many of the commanders decorated their headquarters in a lavish manner. This also gave the storemen a chance for appropriate window displays, and most of them took advantage of it. One of the most notable displays was that designed and executed by Harry Morman, who is the chief decorator for Julius Baer. Others who had windows equally deserving of

The Market.

With midsummer weather and plenty of all kinds of stock, chrysanthemums have been selling at almost any price; yet all the store men report the last week a good one. There is a heavy run of funeral work at present, and, with the weddings, everybody seems to be getting his share.

A strange coincidence was three funerals, all calling for quite a number of designs and clusters, and all of women buried Monday morning and named, respectively, Mrs. Heaney, Mrs. Hannay, and Mrs. Heney—a splendid chance for trouble if the clerks were not careful.

Various Notes.

Gude Bros. had the first decoration in the new Masonic Temple. It was for the oldest Masonic lodge, the Lafayette.

C. B. Norton has opened a flower store at Mt. Pleasant and Fourteenth street. Another is promised in the near future on Pennsylvania avenue, near the War and Navy Department.

Z. D. Blackstone is on the sick list and has gone to Deer Park, Md.

B. Eschner, representing M. Rice & Co., was in town. O. O.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Daniel A. Clarke, of the Red Oak Nurseries, Fiskeville, is unusually busy filling orders for hedge plants.

William Hay, who purchased a 200-acre farm at Oaklawn last winter, has erected a modern greenhouse, 40x350. He has planted this to roses, including Bride, Bridesmaid, Killarney, Richmond and Kaiserin. These are all looking fine and he expects great returns during the season. He still retains his old place at Arlington, which he uses as a distributing point. He has also purchased a runabout automobile, in which he makes his deliveries.

Edward J. Johnston has completed his new house near Rochambeau avenue. It is 30x150 feet and is benched with carnations of such varieties as Mr. Johnston has the most call for in his retail store.

James B. Canning furnished the palms, ferns and other decorations for the opening of the New Ideal store at Pawtucket recently.

Joseph Kopelman & Co., dealers in florists' supplies at 21 Washington street, have opened a retail department for the sale of cut blooms.

The Morgan Floral Co. has completed two new houses, each 21½x200, on a piece of land nicely situated and within sight of the station where all trains arrive and depart. The office and store is built on the corner and connected with the greenhouses. All travel to and from trains is past this corner and it is easily seen what an advantage this is from a business standpoint. This firm began business something over a year ago, leasing an old greenhouse plant, located on Water street. The new firm was handicapped at the start, but, under the supervision of C. A. Morgan, the business began to pick up right away and the outcome is the two modern houses which were built this summer. This firm will make a specialty of carnations, and a house and a half is devoted to this flower. A half house is planted to roses. A small house has been built adjoining these to grow the plants needed in the retail business. The firm does a considerable shipping trade and the prospects are bright for a large increase in both the local and shipping. The houses are equipped with the Advance ventilating machine, with ventilators on both sides of the ridge. An eighty horsepower boiler has been installed and will be large enough for several more houses. Associated with Mr. Morgan in the business is Wm. Lambert, a young business man of Henderson. Mr. Morgan's living rooms are connected with the store room, so he is always on the job.

The Mum Crop.

From the reports about the chrysanthemum crop in this vicinity, it seems that there will be a scarcity of good flowers. When grown under glass they are good, with many florists, but outdoor stock has been badly treated, first by too much rain and lately by a very dry spell.

H. Papworth, J. Newsham, M. Cook's Sons, Abele Bros. and A. Alost, all growers under glass, report a good prospect, but most outside patches look poor and backward.

Club Meeting.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society met Thursday, October 15.

Final arrangements were made for the next flower show, in November.

STORM-TIGHT and RAIN-PROOF in 30 seconds!

This is the famous "Blizzard" Front in actual use, while a furious storm is raging.

With the handy "Blizzard" in place, you can drive in comfort, regardless of snow, rain, wind or cold.

It will keep out every drop of rain and no matter if it is zero weather, the heat of your body will keep the inside of the buggy as comfortable as your "den" at home. No foot-warmers or extra robes necessary. Notice the large window. It is 12x20 inches and made of tough, transparent celluloid, and a side light on each side.

The line pocket is 14 inches wide, and so strongly reinforced with metal that it cannot tear out or sag. Allows you perfect control of the horse.

You can quickly open the "Blizzard" at either side and get in or out with ease.

THE "BLIZZARD" FRONT equalizes the strain on the buggy top and prevents it from rattling. It is made of Blizzard Cloth and will last as long as the top.

Why risk the dangers of exposure—Rheumatism, Colds, Pneumonia? Why not drive in comfort?

The "Blizzard" Front sells for $3.50. If your dealer cannot supply you, we will ship you one on receipt of price. Your money refunded if not exactly as represented. Write for attractive "Blizzard" booklet today. We send it free.

BASSETT & WASHBURN
Growers and Wholesale Dealers in Cut Flowers
76-78 WABASH AVE.

CHICAGO, ILL., October 31, 1907.

THE PULVERIZED MANURE CO.,

Union Stock Yards, Chicago.

Gentlemen: In reply to your inquiry of how we liked your Shredded Cattle Manure, would say that we took one car as a trial, then we gave you an order for two cars more and now we have just bought of you three hundred tons. We gave your manure a good trial test as follows:

We put nine hundred pounds on a bench three hundred feet long by five and one-half feet wide, as a mulch on Beauties, and on the next bench, of exactly the same size, planted also with Beauties, we put two thousand pounds of rough cattle Manure. After three days the rough Manure had become all washed out, nothing being left but straw and dirt, while your Shredded Manure lasted ten to twelve days and is still doing work.

In making manure water it is fully three or four times as strong as the rough Manure. The advantages of its even quality and the easy and unobjectionable way of handling the Manure, not a pound being wasted, make it cheaper in our opinion than the rough Manure which we can get for simply the cost of freight and loading. Respectfully, BASSETT & WASHBURN.

Girvin's Handy Cutter

Mr. Florist, if you once get one of these cutters on your finger you will never be without it for many times the price. Just the thing for cutting your carnations, sweet peas, asters, melons, grapes, etc. Why be bothered with a knife or follow the old way of breaking your flowers when a Handy Cutter will do the work better and save you money and time? Don't continue breaking your carnations and thus ruin hundreds of young shoots daily, simply because a knife is unhandy to work with, but try a Handy Cutter. If you are not entirely satisfied with it you can return it and have your money refunded. These cutters are made of spring brass, highly nickel-plated, and contain a removable blade.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

The unusually warm weather all of last week—for the temperature ran up to 70 or 80 degrees nearly every noon—had a tendency to hasten mums and roses, of which there were more than plenty on Friday and Saturday. But, though white mums are plentiful, other colors are scarce. Carnations were equal to demand for the first time in many a day. On the whole, business was fine, with plenty of stock to fill all orders. What we really need is, first, rain, and, second, cooler weather, which will put business on a more sound basis.

Various Notes.

Adam Zender, of Park Ridge, Ill., is sending the Holton & Hunkel Co. some American Beauties of fine quality. Their own stock in that line is also of a good quality.

Miss Zimmerman, sister and able assistant of Will Zimmerman, is back at work again, having been on the sick list for two weeks.

The Edlefsen-Leidiger Co. reports a lot of work for the last two weeks, including quite a bit of out-of-town work. October 11 this firm announced the opening of its branch store on Third street by advertising a sale on small sword ferns. The good results were beyond all expectations.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. reports having shipped out a carload of azaleas last week. A visit to this firm's greenhouses found the roses about the same as in former seasons, while the carnations, especially those grown under glass all summer, were fine—better than they ever had them. Enchantress and White Perfection showed up best. The new palm and fern houses here, with their concrete benches, present a neat appearance.

James Chacona is having a new front put into his store on Wisconsin street.

The park board has again granted school children the privilege of calling for a limited quantity of bedding stock cuttings at the public parks. In growing them on, they decorate the school-rooms during the winter and then donate the plants to decorate the soldiers' graves on Memorial day. E. O.

Are You Making Repairs?

To say the least it is a hard job to repair greenhouses. At the same time it costs money and cuts down the profits.

If you are "fixing up" the houses for winter you will want a few bars, some putty or fittings, and you will want these things in a hurry. Send us your order and we'll get it out without any delay.

We have in stock various lengths of sash bars and can ship small repair orders in a day or two. Such things as pipe carriers, purlin fittings, gutter hubs, putty bulbs, putty, glazing points, galvanized nails, etc., we have on hand at all times and can ship same day order reaches us, in nearly every case.

To cut down the repair bills, get the next greenhouse from us and put the cost of repairs in the bank.

It's More Than a Gutter

It is a support and brace; it stiffens and strengthens your entire house. The roof bars are gripped fast to the cast iron gutter by the roof bar clasps, making impossible any twisting or crowding out of line. The clasps lead the condensation into the drip gutter, preserving a dry joint—a joint with an endurance and security entirely out of the question with the wooden gutter and toe nailed bars. Casts 50 per cent less shade than any wooden gutter and costs no more in the end.

DUTCH BULBS

BEDDING TULIPS.

Best Varieties and Their Culture.

Tulips can be bedded out from the beginning of October until Christmas. Of course, the latest planted bulbs cannot be expected to give as good results as the earlier ones, much of their strength being frittered away in paper bags or boxes. As a general rule, from the middle of October until the middle of November is the favorite planting time in the northern states.

Although there is no apparent increase in the trade in forced Dutch bulbous stock, there has been an immense impetus given to the outdoor culture of this class of plants. This is not surprising, for no flowers are so universally popular as these harbingers of spring, and I expect to see an enormous increase in their culture in the next decade.

About every retail florist has the filling of a number of beds with bulbs, and of these tulips occupy first place in public esteem. In many cases rainbow or other mixtures are used with good results. Mixed beds are in good taste, much more so than the fantastic color combinations sometimes attempted in some of the public parks and gardens. Personally, I prefer beds of separate colors to those halved, quartered or otherwise divided in ribbon attire, but the latter present a gay appearance and seem to take the eyes of the multitude.

Solid Beds.

Solid beds of any reliable bedding tulips are effective, the following being specially fine: Joost van Vondel, the finest white bedding tulip: White Pottebakker, White Swan, Keizerskroon, Chrysolora, Ophir d'Or, Thomas Moore, Pink Beauty, Proserpine, Sir Thomas Lipton, Couleur de Cardinal, Dusart and Royal Standard. Queen of the Netherlands, the most beautiful of all pink tulips, still remains rather too high priced to come within the range of many purses.

I noticed last year a beautiful circular bed of White Swan with a broad cross of Couleur de Cardinal, red. Another circular bed of Chrysolora, with a cross of Vermilion Brilliant, was striking. The following combinations are all in good taste, if bedded together and flower at the same time: White Pottebakker and Chrysolora; Prince of Austria, President Lincoln and Chrysolora; White Joost van Vondel and Queen of the Netherlands; Keizerskroon bordered with La Reine (Queen Victoria); Chrysolora and Dusart; Duchess de Parma and Fabiola; Ophir d'Or, Wouwerman and Cottage Maid.

Tulips Mixed With Other Bulbs.

Not infrequently beds are planted with both hyacinths and tulips, to allow of a longer season of bloom. As a rule, the two flowers do not agree well æsthetically, but if the hyacinth spikes are removed before the tulips are open, the arrangement is all right. Sometimes, however, the two bloom simultaneously, with rather distressing results. Narcissi are also sometimes mixed through tulip and hyacinth beds. This is not in good taste. The narcissi should be by themselves. For a groundwork among bulbs, myosotis, daisies and violas are commonly used, these being planted, of course, in the spring and making a nice show when the bulb season has waned.

How seldom do we see the magnificent late Darwin and Cottage tulips used in bedding! These in beauty and grace far surpass the early flowering bedding section already referred to, and it is really surprising that more of them are not used in the parks and public gardens, for the cost of many of the most beautiful ones is low. The Cottage section has mostly originated in the cottage gardens in Great Britain and Ireland during the last half century. They are splendid for planting along shrubberies and succeed well left from year to year. All are tall growing and carry large flowers. For

The following Cottage and other species of tulips are all late flowering and comprise some of the most beautiful varieties in commerce: Gesneriana major, crimson scarlet; Gesneriana lutea, the finest golden yellow late tulip; Golden Crown, yellow, edged orange red; Picotee, white, margined cerise; Isabella, syn. Shandon Bells, rose, flaked white; Bouton d'Or, deep yellow; Didieri, crimson vermilion; Inglescombe Scarlet, bright vermilion; and Vitellina, pale primrose. All are moderate in price.

Tulips will grow in almost any good soil to which has been added some well decomposed barnyard manure. Fresh manure should never be used. Care should always be taken to well pulverize the soil, and an average covering over the tops of the bulbs, four inches thick, is about right. Winter protection in the form of leaves or strawy manure should cutting they are splendid and in some seasons make big prices for Memorial day. Every florist who does any business at that holiday—and who does not?—should plant at least a few hundreds of these late tulips.

Darwin and Cottage Varieties.

Of the Darwins, good mixtures produce pleasing effects. The following named sorts can also be strongly recommended: Clara Butt, pale rose-pink; Farncombe Sanders, cherry red; Lord Duncan, scarlet; White Queen, nearly not be given until the ground has become well frozen. The bulbs are perfectly hardy, but the mulching prevents the continual freezing and thawing, which will heave out many of the bulbs.

NOTES ON NARCISSI.

The Increasing Variety of Colors.

The two most popular spring flowering bulbous plants in America are the tulip and the narcissus. The former is at present somewhat in the ascendant, and

It's More Than a Gutter

It is a support and brace; it stiffens and strengthens your entire house. The roof bars are gripped fast to the cast iron gutter by the roof bar clasps, making impossible any twisting or crowding out of line. The clasps lead the condensation into the drip gutter, preserving a dry joint—a joint with an endurance and security entirely out of the question with the wooden gutter and toe nailed bars. Casts 50 per cent less shade than any wooden gutter and costs no more in the end.

DUTCH BULBS

BEDDING TULIPS.

Best Varieties and Their Culture.

Tulips can be bedded out from the beginning of October until Christmas. Of course, the latest planted bulbs cannot be expected to give as good results as the earlier ones, much of their strength being frittered away in paper bags or boxes. As a general rule, from the middle of October until the middle of November is the favorite planting time in the northern states.

Although there is no apparent increase in the trade in forced Dutch bulbous stock, there has been an immense impetus given to the outdoor culture of this class of plants. This is not surprising, for no flowers are so universally popular as these harbingers of spring, and I expect to see an enormous increase in their culture in the next decade.

About every retail florist has the filling of a number of beds with bulbs, and of these tulips occupy first place in public esteem. In many cases rainbow or other mixtures are used with good results. Mixed beds are in good taste, much more so than the fantastic color combinations sometimes attempted in some of the public parks and gardens. Personally, I prefer beds of separate colors to those halved, quartered or otherwise divided in ribbon attire, but the latter present a gay appearance and seem to take the eyes of the multitude.

Solid Beds.

Solid beds of any reliable bedding tulips are effective, the following being specially fine: Joost van Vondel, the finest white bedding tulip; White Pottebakker, White Swan, Keizerskroon, Chrysolora, Ophir d'Or, Thomas Moore, Pink Beauty, Proserpine, Sir Thomas Lipton, Couleur de Cardinal, Dusart and Royal Standard. Queen of the Netherlands, the most beautiful of all pink tulips, still remains rather too high priced to come within the range of many purses.

I noticed last year a beautiful circular bed of White Swan with a broad cross of Couleur de Cardinal, red. Another circular bed of Chrysolora, with a cross of Vermilion Brilliant, was striking. The following combinations are all in good taste, if bedded together and flower at the same time: White Pottebakker and Chrysolora; Prince of Austria, President Lincoln and Chrysolora; White Joost van Vondel and Queen of the Netherlands; Keizerskroon bordered with La Reine (Queen Victoria); Chrysolora and Dusart; Duchess de Parma and Fabiola; Ophir d'Or, Wouwerman and Cottage Maid.

Tulips Mixed With Other Bulbs.

Not infrequently beds are planted with both hyacinths and tulips, to allow of a longer season of bloom. As a rule, the two flowers do not agree well aesthetically, but if the hyacinth spikes are removed before the tulips are open, the arrangement is all right. Sometimes, however, the two bloom simultaneously, with rather distressing results. Narcissi are also sometimes mixed through tulip and hyacinth beds. This is not in good taste. The narcissi should be by themselves. For a groundwork among bulbs, myosotis, daisies and violas are commonly used, these being planted, of course, in the spring and making a nice show when the bulb season has waned.

How seldom do we see the magnificent late Darwin and Cottage tulips used in bedding! These in beauty and grace far surpass the early flowering bedding section already referred to, and it is really surprising that more of them are not used in the parks and public gardens, for the cost of many of the most beautiful ones is low. The Cottage section has mostly originated in the cottage gardens in Great Britain and Ireland during the last half century. They are splendid for planting along shrubberies and succeed well left from year to year. All are tall growing and carry large flowers. For

The following Cottage and other species of tulips are all late flowering and comprise some of the most beautiful varieties in commerce: Gesneriana major, crimson scarlet; Gesneriana lutea, the finest golden yellow late tulip; Golden Crown, yellow, edged orange red; Picotee, white, margined cerise; Isabella, syn. Shandon Bells, rose, flaked white; Bouton d'Or, deep yellow; Didieri, crimson vermilion; Inglecombe Scarlet, bright vermilion; and Vitellina, pale primrose. All are moderate in price.

Tulips will grow in almost any good soil to which has been added some well decomposed barnyard manure. Fresh manure should never be used. Care should always be taken to well pulverize the soil, and an average covering over the tops of the bulbs, four inches thick, is about right. Winter protection in the form of leaves or strawy manure should cutting they are splendid and in some seasons make big prices for Memorial day. Every florist who does any business at that holiday—and who does not?—should plant at least a few hundreds of these late tulips.

Darwin and Cottage Varieties.

Of the Darwins, good mixtures produce pleasing effects. The following named sorts can also be strongly recommended: Clara Butt, pale rose-pink; Farncombe Sanders, cherry red; Lord Duncan, scarlet; White Queen, nearly not be given until the ground has become well frozen. The bulbs are perfectly hardy, but the mulching prevents the continual freezing and thawing, which will heave out many of the bulbs.

NOTES ON NARCISSI.

The Increasing Variety of Colors.

The two most popular spring flowering bulbous plants in America are the tulip and the narcissus. The former is at present somewhat in the ascendant, and for formal bedding purposes, owing to its wide range of colors, it is in some respects superior to the narcissus. We have not, as yet, any scarlet, crimson flaked and bright pink daffodils. As a general rule the flowers of these are either white or some shade of yellow, although some of the newer creations, still beyond the reach of ordinary mortals in price, have medium trumpets of bright scarlet, and we will eventually Imported and Home-grown Narcissi.

At one time Holland was preëminent in narcissus culture. England has now wrested that supremacy from her, and many of the so-called Dutch narcissi received here are grown in the fen district of Lincolnshire, England. The English bulbs are harder and heavier than the Dutch ones, and my experience with them has been that they are superior to the

Mrs. Langtry; Leedsii Minnie Hume; N. incomparabilis Beauty; Barri conspicuus; Victoria, the best bicolor trumpet variety; Emperor and Empress. Glory of Leiden is now quite moderate in price. It is the largest trumpet narcissus in common cultivation today. The poeticus section is splendid for massing in shrubberies, and for naturalizing in grass land these have no equal. The commercial florist who wants to make a little change in his bulb beds should try one each of such narcissi as Barri conspicuus, Emperor, Golden Spur, Victoria and Mrs. Langtry. He will be surprised at the beautiful showing they make. His customers will in many cases want similar beds another season. The advertisement will cost really nothing, as the bulbs are all good for another season.

Field-grown Bulbous Flowers.

There are times of glut in the bulb markets in the north. Generally these occur while forced bulbs are in season. There is, as a rule, a good home trade for bulbous flowers grown in the open, the demand being especially heavy for Narcissus poeticus and the late tulips for Memorial day. For cutting purposes the nursery row plan is the best, as it admits of easy cultivation. It is better to leave the rows undisturbed for three seasons, then lift and replant them.

Probably the most generally popular narcissus, the one which increases the most rapidly and is the most useful to the florist, is the old poeticus. It does better on damp ground, being in its element on the shores of streams or ponds, but grows well even on dry ground. The variety ornatus, flowering two weeks earlier, is also indispensable. The variety grandiflora carries flowers double the size of the common type.

For cutting, the following quintette of trumpets can hardly be beaten: Emperor, Empress, Golden Spur, Glory of Leiden and Victoria. The single Von Sion, or Trumpet Major, I have not found reliably hardy, but the double form will grow almost anywhere. Princeps has so little substance that it is not worth growing, unless there be a demand for cheap flowers. Of the medium Trumpet sorts, the giant Welsh daffodil, Sir Watkin, towers in size above all others; N. incomparabilis Gwyther and Beauty are fine; Barri conspicuus is have narcissi with white or yellow wings and scarlet trumpets, equal in size to those of Victoria, Empress or Emperor. We will also have pure white varieties, with flowers rivaling those of Sir Watkin or Beauty in size, and pure white trumpet varieties far surpassing the beautiful Mme. de Graaff.

The Recent Work of Hybridists.

It will take time to bring about these improvements, but the wonderful work of daffodil hybridists in the last two decades warrants the supposition that even more striking advances will be seen in the years to come. New and striking varieties of tulips are few and far between. It is otherwise with narcissi, dozens of novelties being exhibited annually, and while we may not feel like paying $75 to $250 per bulb for these latest creations, we can rest content that in a few years they will be within the reach of all.

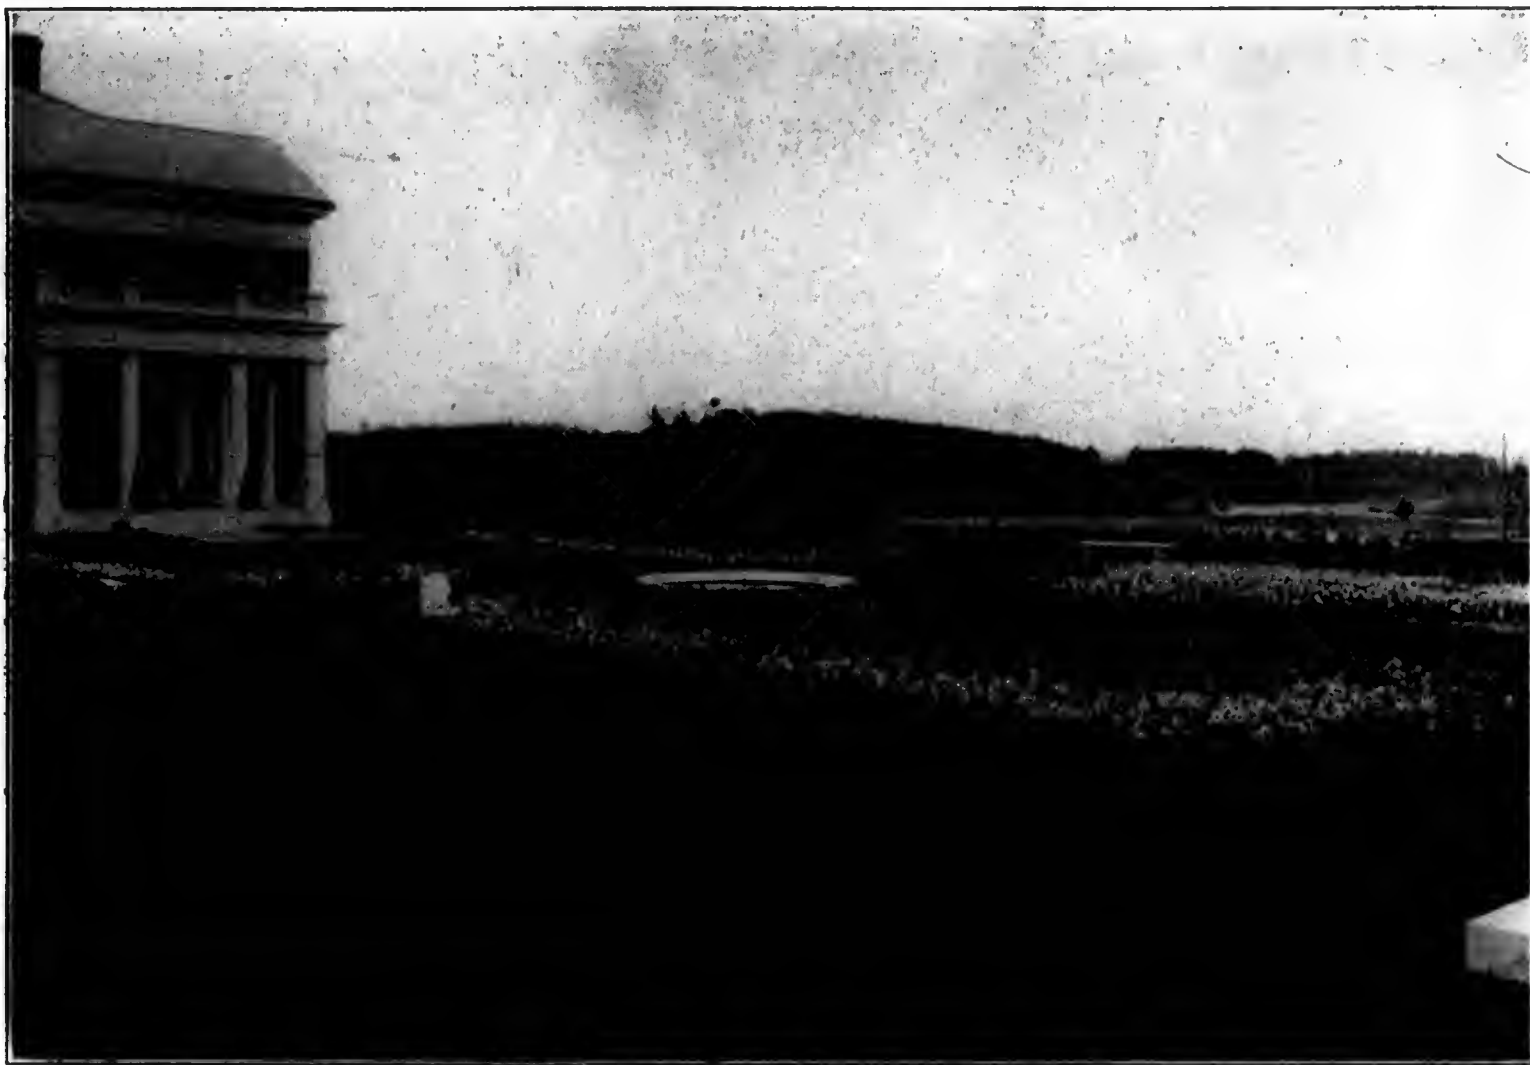

Narcissi have never been used in our public parks, gardens and cemeteries to any considerable extent, and for bedding they have been largely ignored. It cannot be that they are too costly, for the best bedders are as cheap as such standard tulips as Keizerskroon, Proserpine, the Pottebakkers or Chrysolora. It is not because they are tender or difficult of culture. They are as hardy as any of the tulips, rarely fall a prey to disease, as tulips often do, and in nearly every case are far better the second than the first year. It can hardly be claimed that the flowers pass more quickly than those of the tulips, for they last fully as long, and certainly they have a grace far surpassing that of either tulips or hyacinths. We believe, therefore, that once we get greater color variety in the flowers, towards which we are drifting, the popularity of narcissi for outdoor culture will receive an enormous impetus.

Holland article. Virginia is now taking hold of bulbs in earnest, and there is no reason why as good roots cannot be grown there as in Europe. Perhaps the hot weather after lifting will make it difficult to care for and save such sorts as Horsfieldii. With a few exceptions, narcissi increase quite rapidly under cultivation, and will require replanting every third year to prevent overcrowding. Even in Massachusetts it is possible to grow as fine bulbs of Emperor, Empress, Barri conspicuus, Mrs. Langtry, Stella, Sir Watkin, poeticus and other popular sorts as can be imported.

For bedding or massing in shrubberies, the finest sorts are: Golden Spur; Henry Irving, very early; Sir Watkin; Leedsii splendid and for grace and exquisite form Leedsii Mrs. Langtry, Minnie Hume and Duchess of Westminster have no peers.

The old double white, gardenia-scented narcissus is not often seen in good condition; usually the flower stems come blind. This arises from the bulbs being too crowded and in too dry a location. It must have a cool, moist soil of good depth. For Memorial day trade this is valuable. The Sulphur Phoenix, or Codlins and Cream, is another desirable double variety.

Narcissi in Grass Land.

Each year more and more narcissi are being used for naturalizing in grass land. When planted in this way, the grass should not be cut until the foliage on the bulbs has ripened. Used thus, the beauties of the daffodils appeal to everyone. There should be no formality in this style of planting. The bulbs, if scattered over the grass by hand and planted just where they fall, will look perfectly natural.

In addition to N. poeticus, the following varieties lend themselves specially well for use in grass land: N. Burbidgei, N. Burbidgei Vanessa, N. William Goldring, N. Leedsii Duchess of Brabant and Mrs. Langtry, N. Johnstoni Queen of Spain, N. incomparabilis, N. Barri conspicuous and Flora Wilson. N. Emperor, Sir Watkin, Empress and other robust sorts, if used, should be in coarser grass land than the other sorts named.

With the possible exceptions of the common Lent lily, N. Pseudo-Narcissus, and varieties of N. Spurius, each of which are injured by manure, the general run of narcissi like a loose soil which has a good application of well decayed barnyard manure incorporated with it.

Bulbs vary so much in size that there can be no exact depth given for planting. N. minimus has bulbs no larger than a snowdrop, while those of Sir Watkin are as big as one's fist. From two and one-half to five inches are correct depths, the latter for the largest bulbed varieties. The soil must be thoroughly firmed after the bulbs are planted and a light winter mulch need not be given until the ground freezes. From October 15 to November 15 I have found a good time to plant narcissi.

W. N. CRAIG.

BULB GROWING.

How to Make It Profitable.

The subject is an old one and has been written on the world over. It would be superfluous to a Hollander, but as the bulb-growing industry is just now booming in this country it is worth every florist's attention and he can then form his own opinion as to whether or not it is worth while to grow some. The writer has had twenty-five years' experience and is surprised to find some florists have no bulbs at all—a grave mistake, as will be shown. There is no other flower that can be grown so cheaply or so easily.

When, a few years ago, the industry was in the experimental stage, the growers, finding they had certain varieties unsuited to this country, sold them—the worst thing they could have done, as the country was on the tiptoe of expectation as to results.

Troubles With Von Sion.

One man in the south informed me that Narcissus Telamonius plenus (Von Sion), the old double daffodil, grew remarkably well, but as the flowers were green, he closed out his bulbs to a greenhouse firm in the north for forcing! Moral: Do not buy American grown Von Sion until a section is found where they grow yellow. We grew several thousands this year and got about fifty per cent of yellow, so we are giving them one more trial.

Great trouble was experienced in Lincolnshire, England, ten or twelve years ago with this variety, on account of bad colored blooms and basal disease. Both troubles are now completely overcome and the best in the world are grown there now, tons being sent to Holland annually and sent here as Dutch bulbs. This applies also to Ornatus, which is shipped from England to Holland in enormous quantities, probably 100 tons a year. The price this year for both sorts is $100 to $150 a ton, f. o. b., as lifted, free from soil and disease. The latter variety is the more profitable bulb to grow and many acres are grown, most of all in Lincolnshire. Labor is cheap and if the blooms realize anything over 50 cents a thousand, it is a paying crop.

A Practical Question.

The question arises: Why is it that all Europeans love this flower and Americans do not? We would like to see this question answered. If it is because they do not make bunch enough, neither do violets nor valley, but we really think this is the reason. They force exceedingly well and, being small, the bulbs take up little room in the boxes and are light freight. They are prolific and first size bulbs average two blooms. They pay to force at $1 per gross.

Do not put in the greenhouse until December. A good freeze is considered beneficial by some, but not by me, and these opinions hold good with all bulbs. I am not alone in my opinion, and prefer to protect them. It is not customary in Europe to put the boxes under the benches, but to carry them in frozen solid and drench with water. Each variety is put into the house according to its period of flowering; i. e., Golden Spur and Henry Irving, then Von Sion, Princeps, Sir Watkin, Ornatus, Emperor, Empress, in the order named. Others are forced, but not in quantity.

Emperor makes top prices if not crowded in the boxes, but probably, everything considered, Sir Watkin beats them all and is an ideal forcer. It seldom goes down in the boxes like Emperor and Ornatus, a most disastrous occurrence, and, second sized bulbs being certain to bloom, a good number may be put in a box.

Temperature in the House.

Start them and all others cool, not over 50 degrees, until the bud shows, when the limit is 60 degrees by day and 55 degrees at night. Mind, I say the limit; 5 degrees less is better, but do not let your house run up above the limit at any time or failure will result, if it is fire heat or even partly so. I know that in some southern sections it is often this temperature in January, and with hot water there is trouble. I can only say, open every sash and door; shade the glass temporarily, that is, with leaving down two years. The second cause is the greatest source of trouble, but can be overcome by only growing long-stemmed sorts, or, if the section is a very sunny one, by using lattice overhead.

Keeping the soil loose and planting in beds four feet wide will generally give satisfactory results, if lifted early. Darwins may stay down two or three years if given ample room to start with, but it must be ample—nine inches each way.

Tulips do not like rich land. They do exceedingly well after potatoes, if the land was manured in the spring.

Harvesting tulips is almost a profession. The Dutch have it down to a science. Roughly speaking, lift early and lift dry. Store in a dark, cool room. Lay thinly until well dried and pack in boxes six inches deep. Keep the sun and wind off, or they will crack, but early lifting is the great thing. You can clean at leisure any wet day. As you must not plant until November and lift in early June, it will be seen that another crop can easily be obtained.

Keizerskroon, Prince of Austria, and makes a bunch. It is, both inside and out, a grand doer and sells well. I strongly urge every florist in the country to buy some, being assured that in any soil, section or climate it will increase and it never deteriorates anywhere. The next best is Sir Watkin. Why the next best? Well, it seems to have got second place to Emperor, but it often pays fifty per cent better than the latter, as it is quite the ladies' flower—a lovely chalice-cupped flower, without a blemish, given to mankind by the Almighty to denote the arrival of spring. It must not be omitted from the bulb order, being one of the money-makers.

I recommend also Barri conspicuus. This is a cup variety, tinged with scarlet, but will not force. In fact, it glories in cold and dull weather. It should always be gathered in bud and kept dark, or the scarlet will disappear and the beauty be gone. It is the fastest in propagation and may remain three or four years undisturbed.

Empress should be grown, as it is a lovely bicolor; yellow trumpet with clay and water; use a lot of water and, if you fail to get down to 60 degrees, the last remedy is to empty your pipes. We have a hose on the boiler for this, and a high tank to refill the pipes as soon as they are emptied.

Use boxes 12x18x4½ or 5 and do not have two sizes. Plant as soon as your bulbs arrive. Keep some out if a succession is desired. Drainage is almost immaterial. As to soil, be sure it is not rich; you will not get it too poor.

In sending the blooms away, tie in either twelves or twenty-fives and be sure to paper the boxes heavily. Cut the foliage with the flowers and dump the bulbs, as they do not pay to fool with, and by dumping you can save your boxes. The information given here is enough to enable the veriest tyro to succeed.

Outdoor Culture of Tulips.

I have not touched on tulips, as I am writing on growing for profit and consider that it pays best to grow these outdoors. I admit that they have a nasty way of deteriorating outdoors, but this comes from want of practical knowledge in cultivation and is due to these four causes: Treading on the beds after planting, cutting the stems too long, breaking the foliage in cleaning, and Prince de Ligny, Vermilion Brilliant and White Hawk are among the best earlies and include white, red, yellow, orange and yellow and red. Good late tulips are Bouton d'Or, Golden Crown, Picotee and Gesneriana. These are all good sellers and profitable, but be sure to get G. spathulata major superba. Excepting Darwins, there are more dollars in this article than in any other bulb I know of. One object of this article is to advise florists to grow this tulip. It is a perfect gold mine and the price is bound to advance as its merits become known.

Get a dozen each of fifty sorts of Darwin of a reliable man and choose the best for yourself. Without a doubt, one cannot go wrong if he buys Glow, Farncombe Sanders, Bartigon, Gustave Dore, Margaret, Clara Butt, Isis, Mattia, Ant. Roozen, Zulu, C. Becker and Virginia.

Daffodils and Narcissi.

I will revert to daffodils and narcissi for outdoor culture. You may say, Where do you draw the line between the two? I have often been asked the question and say that narcissi are white without yellow—that is all—of course barring the Polyanthus section, which are all narcissi, independently of color.

For daffodils I must start with Emperor, rightly named so, for it is large white perianth. It does well in any soil or situation and forces well indeed.

Lastly comes Grandee, the last to flower, similar to Empress, but not suitable for forcing.

You may venture to buy dwarf gladioli, Spanish and Japanese iris and Lilium candidum, all being good growers and good sellers, but somewhat tricky to force. These last three will give you a succession of flowers from November (Paper White) until June, after which you do not need much, but could grow peonies, Shasta daisies, asters and mums, so as to have flowers every day in the year.

Usefulness of N. Poeticus.

I find I omitted Narcissus poeticus, or Pheasant's Eye, too well known to need description and too cheap to leave out. Moreover, in some sections it comes for Memorial day and is then especially valuable. I have known the flowers to make $20 a thousand, several times the cost of the bulbs. It will not force and must not be planted thickly, or it will not flower. In shipping use ice and pack lightly, or the blooms will melt.

I am not touching on the cultivation, as it is so simple one can hardly go wrong. Any depth over three inches deep to six inches will do, in good soil, and if it is not good put the manure on when frosty and let it wash in.

I may say I have had good reports from California and Kentucky, Indiana to Illinois and Canada. New England, I am told, should suit admirably, but do not know the soil or climate. Where rhubarb and Brussels sprouts will grow properly, so will bulbs, but this is not necessarily a test because we can grow neither here in Virginia.

Remember it is not the first year that you make your dollars, but the second and following years. In fact, the third and fourth year you find yourself short of land.

DEMAND IN BELGIUM.

Prices in Belgium for palms still remain firm, but for most other lines the supply is in excess of the demand. Ghent azalea growers are not receiving much encouragement to extend the culture of trained azaleas, fan-shaped, etc., on account of the difficulty in obtaining sufficient to remunerate them for the extra labor involved. A little sacrificing of prices now on their part should help to create a demand and later on they may pocket the dollars. Some are inclined to throw up the game too soon, forgetful of the fact that the public is really not acquainted with the trained forms yet. Their superiority over the old shape for decorative purposes is bound to tell in the long run. Go ahead, ye Ghent and Loochristy growers; the world is wide and you have no competitors in the same line; the field is your own, a few gratis trained plants in each consignment would prove a splendid advertisement.

STORING LONGIFLORUM BULBS.

Please state the best temperature for storing bulbs of longiflorum giganteum. Also please state how long they can be kept.

M. L. H.

Bulbs of Lilium longiflorum giganteum should be kept in a temperature of 34 degrees. With regard to the length of time bulbs can be kept we would say that if they are placed in the refrigerator as soon as they arrive and the bulbs are in sound condition, they remain dormant and will be in condition to force up to twelve months. This applies to the larger size bulbs, but we do not recommend 6/8 or 7/9 for this long period, as smaller size bulbs kept in this manner are apt to come blind when forced.

The facilities in small towns for storing bulbs are not usually of the best, and there is occasionally some loss of bulbs from various causes. We think that the correspondent, rather than attempting it, would do better if he placed his order with some reliable firm handling cold storage lilies. These can be sent by express any distance, as they remain perfectly dormant for nearly a week after being taken out of the refrigerator, provided they are kept in a dark, cool place.

ARTHUR T. BODDINGTON.

STORING WILD SMILAX.

At what temperature should wild smilax be kept in cold storage, and how long will it keep?

M. L. H.

The firms that store wild smilax in commercial cold storage warehouses put it in at from 35 to 40 degrees, most of them preferring a room with apples, which is kept at 36 degrees to anything above that. The length of time it can be kept is largely governed by its condition when it goes in, and the most expert handlers can not tell what success they will have; the smilax may look all right when it comes out, but quickly drops its leaves. Possibly a month would be an average period for successful storage. The charges are usually 25 cents per case for each month or fraction of a month.

Those who do not have access to a public cold storage warehouse can keep wild smilax for two or three weeks in a regular florist's ice-box, or by storing in a cold cellar and covering the cases with wet blankets. The air and especially a draught seems to injure it about as much as does moderate warmth.

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

THE EXHIBITION SEASON.

An Opportunity for Retailers.

The season of fall flower shows is one which affords the retail florist his best opportunities of the year to get before the public. It presents an opportunity for achieving two results. In the first place, it gives the retail florist an opportunity to show his skill to those who are buying flowers, and to win away the trade of the man who does not take advantage of his opportunities. But better than all else, it affords an opportunity to show the people who are not flower buyers what excellent results can be achieved by skillful florists. Every large flower show proves that the retail exhibits are among the most attractive features and each such show goes far toward creating new flower buyers. Each retail florist owes it to the business to do his part toward the education of the public and the creation of new buyers.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph made at the Washington flower show in 1907. It shows a table and mantel decoration by George Cooke. The mantel was covered with specimen plants of Adiantum Farleyense, with which Bonnaffon chrysanthemums were used. The large parasol which was so striking a feature of the decoration, was made with yellow pompon chrysanthemums, and the same flowers were used for the low table centerpiece, also with cut fronds of Farleyense.

This corner was one of the most attractive features of the Washington show and Mr. Cooke said that the effect was at once apparent in his business, for new customers came at once to him, and these, with old ones, spoke of his show exhibit and even asked for work of similar character.

TO INCREASE CASH SALES.

We have a local retail business and find our cash receipts to be much less than we think they should be. We would like to hear through the columns of the REVIEW suggestions as to how to increase cash sales. We live in an agricultural section, where the credit system is in full possession, and the daily sales light. The heaviest item of our trade is funeral work, which is generally ordered over the telephone and therefore charged. We believe we ought to take in enough cash throughout the week to pay our hands on Saturday. We don't come to this by half.

We do not believe it would be possible to stimulate the local demand by cash bargains. We have tried that in a limited way. People regard flowers as luxuries and, in most cases, only buy when occasion demands; hence we do not believe that price cutting pays in a small or medium sized place.

We had considered the feasibility of growing one or two side lines for the trade. Can you tell us what can be done in this line on a small place in a mild climate?

JNO. L. SAHEL.

[We have no doubt that replies to the above questions will be read with interest by many in the trade.—ED.]

THE STAR.

The illustration herewith is a good example of one of the ways C. H. Fox treats this form of design at his store, The Sign of the Rose, Philadelphia. The groundwork is of Bride roses, the points of lily of the valley. While grace is desired, the first object is to clearly bring out the lines of the star. To further this end the base is just sufficiently decorated with roses to relieve the green, but not enough to detract from the star above. Mr. Fox always makes up designs of this nature prone on the counter, attaching them to the base when completed. PHIL.

SUGGESTIONS FOR WINDOWS.

A Pond With Live Ducklings.

Here is an early spring or Easter window: Collect a number of water plants, like cyperus, calla, water hyacinth, etc. Set these on and between a number of rocks and construct an island in a prominent part of the window. Cover the pots over the top with sand and gravel high enough to be out of the water and yet have a slope down to it. Build a mainland with a good, long stretch of beach. Back in the rear, with free access from the beach, place what appears to be the front end of a tiny rustic cottage, but which is really a brooder for our ducklings, for this is to be a live duckling window. Half smother the brooder with flowering plants, such as spiræas, hydrangeas, lilacs, etc. Screen in the window securely from the back. Arrange the hose and its water supply as in the fish pond, already described. Give the ducklings full possession and they, as well as the spectators, will enjoy it to the full.

The Star.

An Exhibition Table and Mantel Decoration That Made Business for the Florist.

A Rustic Bridge.

Another: Make a broad bed for a creek, over which a rustic bridge passes. Let the road leading to the bridge be graveled and planted along each side with low growing plants, according to fancy. At the other end of the bridge, where the road is supposed to lead away, let it disappear as if turning. Bank up with tall palms or blooming plants and ferns. Under the bridge float water lilies. If you wish to display them for sale, make the bridge of new pots. For a wild scene use a single log, supposed to have fallen, for a bridge. Coreopsis, gaillardias and autumn leaves would finish the scene appropriately.

A Canoe With a Cargo of Flowers.

Still another: Have at the end of the window a group or sort of thicket, if you please, of overhanging foliage, among which are hidden hanging vases having the appearance of growing up among the branches. On the opposite bank lay out a beach and on it set a canoe loaded with flowers, as though just pulled out of the water to discharge its cargo.

A Lighthouse.

A lighthouse: Build a tower, the size of which is to be determined by the size of the window, of birch, other bark, or shingles. Have a series of windows around the top and place an electric light within. Set on a beach with no obstruction in front, but with a mass of foliage, blooming plants or cut flowers behind it. Keep the beach clear all around the water line, which might be shaped like a harbor, with the lighthouse on a point. Moor a tiny sailboat out from the shore, with a cargo of flowers. Display stock all around from the rear of the window.

A fountain is a more common form of water window. This is usually banked around with ferns and flowers, and planted in the water will be found water plants and water lilies. Fish, frogs and turtles make it their home. Such windows are common enough to need no detailed description. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

BERRY GLOBES.

For the retail florist, the partridge berry globe is one of the best selling novelties for Christmas that has been introduced in years. The idea originated in the New England states, where the berries appear to be most plentiful, and where it has met with an increasing demand each season, until last year, when about twice as many were sold as previously. The market widened until orders came from cities in the west and south for more than could be filled. Several firms made a business of supplying these globes to the trade, and made them by the thousand.

Ordinary fish globes, in sizes from four to eight inches in diameter, were used, covered with a piece of glass cut to fit the top of the globe. This was afterward improved upon by having a lid or cover of pressed glass made for the purpose. A red cord with tassels tied in a bow around the neck of the globe gives a finish and makes it a most complete and acceptable Christmas gift.

These globes retail at a good profit, the selling price ranging from $1.50 to $3.50 each, or as high as $5, according to size and the trade of the stores handling them.

The partridge berry, as it is generally called, although it is also known locally in different places as squaw berry, two-eyed berry, rabbit berry, turkey berry, etc., is botanically named Mitchella repens. It grows all over the United States east of the Mississippi, particularly in the pine woods, from Canada to Mexico, being most plentiful in the New England states. It is a low-growing vine, with glossy green leaves, bearing berries about the size of peas, of a bright holly red color. These can be gathered from October 1 on, packed in damp moss, and stored in cool cellars or in storage, where they will keep perfectly until wanted. The vines are picked with stems about four to six inches long, each with a berry, and tied in bunches of fifty sprays.

The trade price for these is from $2.50 to $3 per thousand sprays. In filling the globes a ball of sphagnum, covered with green sheet moss, is bound together with thread (silkalene or other green thread is best), then moistened well and filled with the berry sprays. Three of these about two to three inches long are stemmed together with hair-wire, and made as pointed at the stem end as possible. Some workers place the sprays separately in the moss, using a pair of tweezers to handle them. Care should be taken not to make the ball of moss too large, as it cannot be placed readily in the globe when finished, and also presents a too crowded appearance should the berries press against the glass. When covered from the air so as to retain the moisture and stood in a light place, but not in the sun, these globes will retain their beauty in the house for several months and have given the greatest satisfaction.

At the S. A. F. convention at Niagara Falls I had the pleasure of showing a new globe, made especially for the purpose, that received honorable mention because it has several points of merit over the old style fish globe, which has been used only because it seemed to be the only thing available. The new design presents a perfect globe, which is of much more elegant appearance. It consists of two parts, the globe or cover, and the stand or base in which it rests, both of which parts are of the clearest crystal. The stand is so constructed that there is room for the roots of a fern and in the larger size for a small earthen pan, which will hold several ferns, so that in its dual capacity as a miniature fernery and berry globe it can be used at all seasons. When filled with ferns and berry vines combined it is also very pretty.

Ventilation is arranged for in the base, which is perforated with holes so as to admit the amount of air required. The accompanying illustrations give a good idea of the construction of the globe and its appearance when filled.

FLORISTS' DELIVERY.

Not the least important feature of a high class flower business is the delivery. The flower business is one which demands large delivery facilities. Flowers seldom are of any value if delivery is late, and the class of people who buy flowers appreciate their coming to them in a first-class turnout. Aside from his show window, the retail florist has few such strong advertisements as those daily on the streets in the form of good wagons and good teams.

The two illustrations on page 11 indicate the delivery facilities maintained by Pennock Bros., Philadelphia. The automobile is a recent addition.

and if the sun comes out bright each day it will help you a great deal by drying out the atmosphere. In case of damp, cloudy weather, take your sulphur blower and fill the air full of grape dust, or slaked lime and sulphur mixed half and half. If it is cold enough to run a little heat, do so, even if you have to open the ventilators a few inches. Then paint one of the pipes with sulphur and lime, mixed with water to make a thick paint.

Do not hesitate to pull off all the diseased leaves as fast as they appear, because that is the quickest and surest way to destroy the spores, and besides, every leaf with a spot on it will die later, even if you kill the disease, and would have to be removed then.

INSECTICIDES FOR THRIPS.

Results of Experiments at Urbana, Ill.

It is conclusive from my experiments that thrips, especially when feeding exposed on the surface of the leaf, can be controlled by spraying with solutions containing nicotine. Twenty cubic centimeters, or two-thirds of an ounce, of a forty per cent nicotine insecticide or tobacco extract in a gallon of water has been used to advantage on roses without any injury to the flowers or plants. Seven and one-half cubic centimeters, or one-fourth ounce, has proved as great a strength of the insecticide as can safely be employed in spraying cucumbers, even when the spray is washed off shortly after each application. This strength has been efficient in killing those thrips hit by the spray.

The amount of the insecticides usually advised is one to two teaspoonfuls, one-eighth to one-fourth ounce, to a gallon of water. It will be noted that this amount is much less than that used in our experiments, except in the cucumber experiments, where the maximum quantity advised by the manufacturers was used.

Considered from the standpoint of pure nicotine, which of course is the real basis of comparison, both for the insecticides themselves and all spray materials made from them, the quantities were: In the experiments on roses, using twenty cubic

REMEDY FOR RUST.

I enclose specimens of carnation plants which are affected with rust. Can you tell me how to check it? W. B.

LEAF SPOT ON ENCHANTRESS.

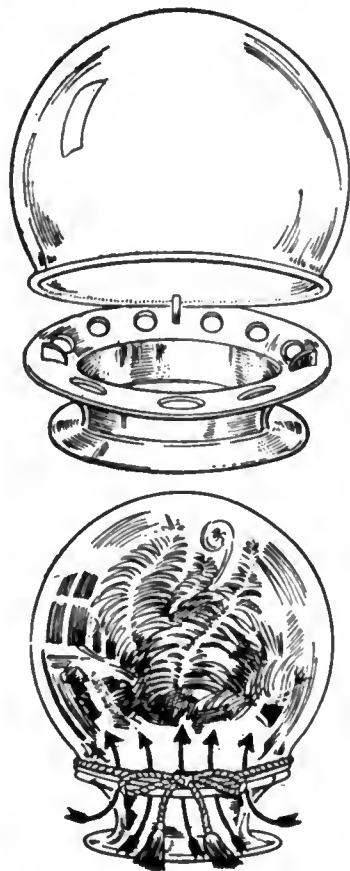

Enclosed you will find leaves picked from my Enchantress carnations. I am at a loss to know what is the cause of their condition, and fear that my entire crop will be ruined. Will you please state the disease, and the remedy for it, if there is any? F. N. B.

The specimens forwarded were badly affected with the common leaf spot, and you must get to work at once, while the weather is still in your favor, or it will do your crop great damage. First of all, get rid of the conditions which bring on these spot diseases, and then apply your remedies, as I will suggest to you. Too much humidity is primarily the cause of all these fungous diseases, and this is frequently aggravated by an excess of rank, foul-smelling dressing or mulching material. Whatever may be the cause in your case, remove it at once and get the atmosphere into a sweet, buoyant state.

Go over the plants and remove every leaf which shows any of these spots, even though you have to nearly strip some of the plants. Then dust the soil lightly with dry-slaked lime and spray overhead with Bordeaux mixture. Leave these both on the plants for several days. In fact, they need not be washed off for a week or more if nothing interferes to necessitate syringing or heavy watering. When you water, turn the water on slowly and water sparingly. The idea is to give the roots what is needed without wetting the foliage or stems of the plants. Better run the soil a little on the dry side, as that will have a tendency to harden the growth and make it less susceptible to the attacks of the disease, but do not let the plants suffer for water.

Dispense with feeding of all kinds, as they all soften the growth more or less. Give all the ventilation possible, centimeters of the insecticide, there were eight cubic centimeters of pure nicotine. This gave one part nicotine to 480 parts of water. In the latter experiments, out of the seven and a half centimeters used, about three were nicotine in each gallon of spray material, or one part nicotine to 1,250 parts of water.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the amount of the insecticides usually advised is not sufficient to kill thrips except under the most favorable conditions. However, in order to determine accurately just how much of any of the nicotine preparations now on the market should be used for the extermination of thrips it is necessary to know the per cent of nicotine in them.

All the insecticides used in my experiments for the repression of thrips were analyzed by the Department of Chemistry of the University of Illinois. Their report may be of interest to florists.

Nico-Fume paper, total nicotine, 2.1884 grams per sheet. To-bak-ine paper, total nicotine, 28.51 grains per sheet.

XL All Vaporizing Compound analyzed 6.83% camphor.

J. K. Haywood, in Bulletin No. 68, U. S. Division of Chemistry, reported Nikoteen to contain 26.01 per cent nicotine. Rose Leaf Extract of tobacco, as analyzed by the chemists of the Kentucky Experiment Station, contained 2.00, 1.54, 1.91, 2.07, 2.14 per cent nicotine respectively in the different samples. This latter insecticide cannot be called a high strength nicotine insecticide in comparison with the other compounds named in the table, except the XL All Liquid. Even though it is advised to use for fumigation six times, and for spraying eight times as much as is advised for the other insecticides, it is apparent that we cannot get the same amount of pure nicotine in the vapor or spray when it contains less than one-sixth as much nicotine. When the nicotine content is known it is possible to liberate as much nicotine from a low strength compound by using proportionately larger quantities.

In spraying with large amounts of low strength nicotine preparations there is danger of discoloring flowers and of coating the leaves with a gummy resinous deposit which some of them contain. Such preparations are valuable for use outdoors and for evaporation in the greenhouse, especially from pans on the steam pipes.

The point to keep in mind is that the value of these insecticides depends on the amount of nicotine in them and the price should be governed accordingly. An insecticide containing two per cent nicotine at $1 a gallon is more expensive than a forty per cent preparation at $10 a gallon, when we consider it in relation to the cost of the pure or absolute nicotine.

It is essential that the nicotine of an insecticide be uniform, not only because the florist is entitled to full value for his money, but because it is only possible to secure positive results, without danger, from the use of insecticides of definite and uniform strength which the grower has become accustomed to using. An example may be cited in the injury produced by one of the best known insecticides used for spraying carnations in one of the largest establishments near Chicago. The analysis of this insecticide material revealed the fact that it contained from eight to nine per cent more nicotine than any other sample of this preparation that we have examined. This fact, taken in connection with that of the rather inexact measurement of insecticides frequently practiced by greenhouse employees, will doubtless explain the cases of injury to ordinary greenhouse plants. Nicotine is a powerful poison and all its preparations are poisonous. If not so designated they should be, as well as the per cent of nicotine they contain. If these things were done and the standard maintained the best nicotine preparations now on the market for use in greenhouses against sucking insects, would leave little to be desired in this line.

XL All Vaporizing Compound analyzed 6.8% camphor.

J. K. Haywood, in Bulletin No. 68, U. S. Division of Chemistry, reported Nikoteen to contain 26.01 per cent nicotine. Rose Leaf Extract of tobacco, as analyzed by the chemists of the Kentucky Experiment Station, contained 2.00, 1.54, 1.91, 2.07, 2.11 per cent nicotine respectively in the different samples. This latter insecticide cannot be called a high strength nicotine insecticide in comparison with the other compounds named in the table, except the XL All Liquid. Even though it is advised to use for fumigation six times, and for spraying eight times as much as is advised for the other insecticides, it is apparent that we cannot get the same amount of pure nicotine in the vapor or spray when it contains less than one sixth as much nicotine. When the nicotine content is known it is possible to liberate as much nicotine from a low strength compound by using proportionately larger quantities.

In spraying with large amounts of low strength nicotine preparations there is danger of discoloring flowers and of coating the leaves with a gummy resinous deposit which some of them contain. Such preparations are valuable for use outdoors and for evaporation in the greenhouse, especially from pans on the steam pipes.

The point to keep in mind is that the value of these insecticides depends on the amount of nicotine in them and the price should be governed accordingly. An insecticide containing two per cent nicotine at $1 a gallon is more expensive than a forty per cent preparation at $10 a gallon, when we consider it in relation to the cost of the pure or absolute nicotine.

It is essential that the nicotine of an insecticide be uniform, not only because the florist is entitled to full value for his money, but because it is only possible to secure positive results, without danger, from the use of insecticides of definite and uniform strength which the grower has become accustomed to using. An example may be cited in the injury produced by one of the best known insecticides used for spraying carnations in one of the largest establishments near Chicago. The analysis of this insecticide material revealed the fact that it contained from eight to nine per cent more nicotine than any other sample of this preparation that we have examined. This fact, taken in connection with that of the rather inexact measurement of insecticides frequently practiced by greenhouse employees, will doubtless explain the cases of injury to ordinary greenhouse plants. Nicotine is a powerful poison and all its preparations are poisonous. If not so designated they should be, as well as the per cent of nicotine they contain. If these things were done and the standard maintained the best nicotine preparations now on the market for use in greenhouses against sucking insects, would leave little to be desired in this line.

HARDWOOD ASHES.

Please let me know how to use hardwood ashes as a palm and fern fertilizer. Kindly state how strong and how often to use it to get results.

L. H.

The most satisfactory fertilizer for palms and ferns is one that is rich in nitrogen and phosphoric acid, and these manures are lacking in wood ashes, the latter being rich in potash instead. For

duced by one of the best known insecticides used for spraying carnations in one of the largest establishments near Chicago. The analysis of this insecticide material revealed the fact that it contained from eight to nine per cent more nicotine than any other sample of this preparation that we have examined. This fact, taken in connection with that of the rather inexact measurement of insecticides frequently practiced by greenhouse this reason wood ashes is less beneficial to plants of this character than stable manure, dried blood, soot or bone dust, though a moderate quantity of the ashes may be mixed in the potting soil to some advantage.

EXHIBITION BLOOMS.

Packing and Shipping.

Packing and shipping exhibition flowers calls for considerable care and patience if the stock has to travel any distance.

The first thing is to get boxes of the right size and shape. My own boxes, while they may not be the ideal, are satisfactory to me, and are the result of some years' experimenting and experience. They are five feet six inches long, eighteen inches wide and ten inches deep, inside measure. The lumber used is 1/2-inch, braced in the center of the box with pieces up the sides 1x1-inch and with 1-inch lumber for the ends. Such a box, while it is light, gives considerable room. It will hold from eighteen to twenty-four flowers of the largest size on stems three to four feet long, and smaller stock in proportion.

Flowers, if they are to be shipped any distance, should stand in water for twenty-four hours before packing, to get the stems full of water. This will offset the loss of moisture that occurs in a long shipment, and the flowers will not be wilted when they are taken out of the box. If a flower once goes down in transit it is hard to get it up again.

The head of every flower should be papered with tissue to prevent the blooms rubbing against each other. In the case of Japanese varieties, many of them can, by lifting the petals, be compressed into considerably less space and tied on the top of the flower. With the flowers that assume the shape of a ball this cannot be done and it is better to tie the paper under the flower.

If the stem is at all inclined to be weak it is better to tie it to a bamboo stake, so that there is no strain on the stem, and a stake often prevents the flower from snapping off.

Having the flowers all ready to put into the box, one should get some pillows made large enough to sit under the neck of the flowers without permitting the flower to be crushed on the bottom of the box. Then lay in the flowers on the pillows, working from each end of the box to the middle. Some growers use wood-cleats and tie the flowers to the cleats. This I do not like, because in the case of jars and jolts, which the boxes will most assuredly get when being moved around by the expressman, there is no give to the flowers and they often are broken. Sheets of wet newspaper laid between the foliage will keep the leaves much fresher than when this is not done.

After the box is full, cleats can be nailed on the stems to keep them from threshing around, and, after that, there is little that can be done except trust in Providence.

Details to Be Observed.

The old hand at exhibiting first looks over the schedule of a show that he intends to exhibit at, then looks over his flowers and sees what he can do in good shape, and makes his entries accordingly.

Then, when packing, he keeps his classes together in the boxes and marks on the cover of the box just what each box contains. Then, in unpacking, each class is by itself and much confusion is avoided. Much of the worry and rush in the exhibition hall could be avoided by foresight.

Let every variety be labeled with its name before it is packed and another cause of worry and hurry is avoided at the last moment.

Some additional flowers should be taken along, because some flowers will be bruised and it is hard in a close competition to lose out because one of the flowers was poor or damaged.

So many things enter into the calculations of an exhibition that it is largely a gamble. The condition in which flowers travel, the personal ideas and opinions of judges, the luck that pursues a man even after he has done his best, and the way the flowers hold up if the judging be delayed, all combine to make the game fascinating, even though it is a gamble. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

FOUR FINE MUMS.

Here are four of the finest things on the Hill Co. place the present season:

Madagascar (Calvat).—A golden yellow which reflexes slightly, three and one-half feet, big, full and substantial, and coming into bloom October 12. This is an ideal commercial variety, with a stiff stem and beautiful, close-set foliage; the petals recurve slightly and it can be packed easily and safely.

Fee Orientale (Nonin).—An early Guy Hamilton, similar in form, snow white, with creamy center; stems like willow wands; a beautiful flower, ready October 10 to 12.

Virginia Poehlmann (Poehlmann).—A white sport from Calvat's Mme. Paul Sahut; a gem of a commercial sort; has not a defect, though it might have a longer stem; fully ready October 15.

Mlle. Marguerite Desjonis (Liger).—We are inclined to call this the grandest of all the white commercials; it is purity itself, with a texture like paper, lasting in perfect condition the longest of any mum that we know; it is large and firm, but not heavy, and all of the most perfect finish; stems long and stiff; can be had from October 1 till late November.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

Work of the Committees.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 16.—Fee Orientale, cream white, Japanese reflexed, exhibited by the E. G. Hill Co., scored 81 points commercial scale.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 24.—(No name), light pink, Japanese, exhibited by Paul O. Tauer, Lebanon, Ind., scored 82 points commercial scale.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 24.—G. W. Pook, terra cotta red, incurved Japanese, exhibited by Elmer D. Smith, scored 85 points exhibition scale.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 24.—Rose Pockett, buff yellow, reflexed Japanese, exhibited by E. D. Smith, scored 85 points exhibition scale.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 24.—No. 58-2-06, white Japanese incurved, exhibited by Elmer D. Smith, scored 88 points commercial and 90 points exhibition scale.

NEW ORLEANS.

At the last meeting of the committee of arrangement for the flower show it was announced that Washington Artillery hall had been secured to hold the exhibit. E. Baker will act as superintendent. The judges will be John Eblen, A. E. Weller and George Thomas. C. R. Panter, H. Y. Shurman and C. W. Eichling will solicit prizes.

The public in general and the florists personally were invited to visit the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co. October 25. H. Papworth had plenty to do receiving all his guests and everybody admired his stock, which is hard to duplicate. His chrysanthemums are in a prime condition and his palms, just housed, are perfect. A few acres of cosmos mingled with ladies, helping themselves at pleasure to bunches of flowers, was a sight to be seen. A special car brought back the majority of the florists.

Every florist is busy giving the last touch to his chrysanthemums. The market is not going to be overloaded and we can expect good prices.

J. Shakai, one of the largest growers of mums, has disposed of all his crop at wholesale.

B. M. Wichers had his stock of ferns greatly damaged by the fumes from a chemical manufactory, situated close to his place.

C. W. Eichling has been quite busy filling shipping orders for ferns and other stock.

M. Cook's Sons will soon have their new greenhouse complete, ready to house plants, chiefly palms.

P. M. Koontz, of McGregor Bros. Co., Springfield, O., was in town taking orders for his firm.

GIGANTEUM LILIES.

Will you please give me some information in regard to forcing giganteum lilies? Does their treatment differ from that of longiflorum?
E. E. G.

The treatment to be afforded Lilium longiflorum giganteum does not differ from that commonly given to the ordinary type. Cultural notes on longiflorums will be found every few weeks in the Seasonable Suggestions appearing in the REVIEW.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Cinerarias.

The first sowing of cinerarias is now in 6-inch pots, with the flowering stems a foot in height. These will have some flowers open by the end of the year and will be in full bloom in January. Being gross feeding plants, liquid manure should be afforded them once in four or five days. Spread the plants out to prevent crowding of the leaves. A cineraria without good foliage down to the pot is a poor object.

Later sowings are now growing fast and should be potted on before the roots become too much matted. A fresh supply of tobacco stems placed among the plants once a fortnight will keep aphids in check, but a fumigation every week to make doubly sure is advisable.

A temperature of 40 to 45 degrees at night is high enough for cinerarias in winter. Coldframes may be utilized for them until the mums are out of the way.

Palms.

October weather has proved so extremely hot that a fair coating of shading on palm houses has been a necessity. Usually at this season it has been possible to considerably reduce it, but it is unwise to do so under recent climatic conditions, which are more suggestive of early September than late October. Besides the danger of burning the leaves, the removal of too much shading will cause the foliage to turn paler in color.

A thorough hoeing over, once a day at least, is desirable, using the sprayer in order to secure a strong pressure. This will help materially in holding spider, mealy bug and scale in check.

The present is not a good season for doing any repotting. It is better to feed plants which are somewhat potbound in order to keep their foliage of a dark green color. An occasional application of liquid manure is beneficial to all palms and, in order to tone up those showing yellowing foliage, weak nitrate of soda water or soot water may be applied.

Many growers err in overpotting Cocos Weddelliana. This graceful palm makes comparatively few roots and should be kept in small pots.

A night temperature of 60 to 62 degrees is ample for palms such as are used commercially, and, of course, the atmosphere should always be moist.

Nephrolepis.

Sales for nephrolepis have been rather slow thus far this fall, but the demand should improve from this time on. Plants potted some weeks ago are rooting around the sides of the pots nicely and will require more frequent waterings.

Do not grow your nephrolepis in a heavily shaded house, or the fronds will be soft and brittle. Just enough shading to break the direct rays of the sun is required.

Do not crowd the plants; elevate a number of the best to give more room for the others, and hang some up near the glass. These will all give you splendidly furnished specimens. Be careful to keep the fronds dry.

If you use the hose over the foliage of such heavily fronded forms as Whitmani, Elegantissima, Amerpohlii and Todeaoides, many of the pinnæ will rot in the centers of the plants.

A high temperature for nephrolepis is neither desirable nor necessary, 55 degrees at night being ample.

Rambler Roses.

It is much too early to place pot-grown ramblers under cover. They should be left outside until the canes have had several quite sharp frosts, sufficiently severe to take off the leaves. Moderate dryness at the root is still desirable to assist in ripening the wood. Damp conditions keep the plants growing too long and the soft ends of the shoots are of no value.

Now is an excellent time to pot up a batch of field-grown ramblers for forcing the coming season. These will not give as good results as plants which have been pot-grown all summer, but are preferable to those dug up and potted just before being wanted for forcing. Keep all possible roots intact when potting the ramblers, tie up the shoots to a stout stake and stand outside in a sunny spot, where they should remain until severe frost threatens to break the pots.

Amaryllis.

The water supply having been gradually reduced for some weeks back, as previously advised, the foliage on amaryllis will now be drying off and the pots can be laid on their sides under a bench, where they will not get much drip and where they will not be in close contact with heating pipes. A house kept at 45 to 50 degrees at night is sufficiently warm.

NEW YORK.The Market.

There was no improvement in market conditions last week. The wholesale center was overwhelmed with shipments, in which chrysanthemums predominated, and there was no standard for prices. Demand was light and clearances were made, if at all, at whatever the stock would bring. Saturday, October 24, there was a fair clean-up, but at probably lower values than ever were seen at this date. The big buyers in Brooklyn took their stock away by the wagon-load. The warm weather has been particularly unwelcome to the chrysanthemum growers, for it has brought in stock which would not ordinarily arrive until November and prices on all grades have been down.

The present week opened with the accumulations fairly well cleaned out, and rain, with the promise of colder weather. Were it not the week preceding election, with political excitement centered here, there would be grounds for anticipating a better business.

Beauties have advanced a little in price, but other roses still are going at exceedingly low rates. Richmond seems to suffer the worst. Valley is too abundant and cannot all be sold at any price, but the retailers report a good many wedding orders booked, so that the growers of valley and lilies anticipate better prices before long. Violets especially show the bad effects of the warm weather. Prices continue at the lowest level. The crop of cattleyas has been one of the largest on record, but there is now some reduction in the supply, although it still is so heavy prices are away down. Carnations, too, are in large oversupply and selling at unsatisfactory figures.

Chrysanthemum Mlle. Marguerite Desjonis.

Various Notes.

W. E. Marshall has been appointed marshal of the horticultural section of the business men's big Taft parade for Saturday afternoon, October 31. He thinks the trade will give a good account of itself and have several hundred representatives in the demonstration.

Ford Bros. point with pride to their carnations. Will Ford spends his weekends at his mountain home in Pennsylvania, where his family resides.

B. Rosens says the wild smilax is extra fine this year.

John P. Scherer, of Union Hill, is erecting two new houses on his property. He will make 636 Gardner street his headquarters this season and deliver his goods daily in the city.

B. S. Slinn, Jr., whose specialty is violets, says he is receiving over twenty boxes a day, some fine white ones among them.

The Geller Florists' Supply Co. has added a new office to its conveniences.

Samuel A. Woodrow reports his European importations of boxwood as selling rapidly.

Russin & Hanfling are putting out some new styles in baskets for Thanksgiving.

George Saltford looks for a better appreciation of violets here this winter than last, and predicts a better average price as soon as the season fairly opens.

O. V. Zangen reports an excellent seed business this fall.

H. E. Froment says L. B. Coddington's Beauties are coming fast and good.

George Cotsonas says this year's fern crop is the finest he has ever received and he is storing large quantities.

Mr. Weigel, of Weigel & Ujfalussy, the successors of Emil Steffens, says out-of-town shipments are increasing daily.

The optimistic atmosphere at David Clarke's Sons' big retail store is always an inspiration. They say, "Business is good and we have nothing to complain of."

Charles A. Bayer, at 52 West Twentyninth street, has a stock of araucarias, ferns and palms, and makes small ferns for dishes a specialty.

The auctions still draw good houses. About everything in the plant and bulb line can be had at bargain prices.

Lehnig & Winnefeld, of Hackensack, have been delivering some fine celosias to retailers, who make attractive windows of them.

The $1 boxes are made a profitable Saturday special by many retailers.

Phoenix Roebelenii is becoming increasingly popular.

John Scott, of Flatbush, and Louis Dupuy, of Whitestone, are sending fine gardenias to the market. Mr. Scott suffered a relapse last week because of too great haste in taking up his work after an illness with typhoid fever, but at latest accounts was on the mend again.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held Monday evening, November 9, when nominations will be in order. Chairman Will Rickards has announced

George W. Smith.

Wednesday evening, November 18, for the club's smoker. Everybody will be welcome, and a fine musical program may be depended upon.

Stumpp & Walter Co. has been making many improvements in the upper stories of its building and is holding a two weeks' poultry show on the second floor, commencing October 26. The firm has one of the most complete stores in the business. Go to 50 Barclay street this week and next and see the roosters.

J. F. Sullivan left for home October 22 after a week's visit here. He says Phil Breitmeyer is sure to land the mayoralty in Detroit.

Davy Mellis, of Flatbush, won the valuable silver cup of the Brooklyn Bowling Green Club for the third time this fall, and now is the proud owner of the trophy. He is the president of the club. Will Elliott, the auctioneer, is also an expert bowler on the green.

A. T. Boddington reports George Burk, superintendent of parks at Pittsburg, a recent visitor.

The chrysanthemum show at the American Institute promises well and the week after, November 17 to 19, the great exhibition of the Horticultural Society of New York will be held in the Museum of Natural History. No admission will be charged. It doubtless will be attended by many thousands of flower lovers.

Bowling.

The Bowling Club has at last located at Thumm's alleys, Broadway and Thirty-first street, and Monday evening has been chosen for practice. Every second Monday in the month the club will bowl at 3 o'clock in the afternoon because of the Florists' Club's meeting. The best scores October 22 were:

	1st	2d	3d	4th	5th
Sullivan	116	127	135	191	192
Scott	181	124	128	149	125
Marshall	128	163	185	134	147
Manda	215	147	142	137	151

Siebrecht, Miesem, Burns, Donaldson, Kessler and other suburban florists have organized a club that meets at Astoria on Tuesday evenings.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

The real estate columns note that Jones & Seitz leased for a client to Bonnet & Blake, wholesale florists in Brooklyn, the store and basement at 130 Livingston street, between Smith street and Boerum place, for a term of years.

Blauvelt & Dierkes have dissolved partnership, Mr. Blauvelt to continue the business. Mr. Dierkes is again with Warendorff.

Henry Gunther has the sympathy of all in the death of his daughter.

The new firm of Schumacher & Kessler, 113 West Thirtieth street, do a wholesale business in plants as well as cut flowers.

The market was as low Tuesday, October 27, as it was at any time the week before. Chrysanthemums are a perfect deluge.

GEORGE W. SMITH.

George W. Smith, president-elect of the Cleveland Florists' Club, is one of the young men who are making their mark in the business. Born in Cleveland in 1877, he has been connected with the trade since childhood and is proprietor of the Cleveland Florists' Exchange, doing a wholesale business in cut flowers and supplies. He is energetic in all that he undertakes and his election will no doubt stimulate the attendance and membership of the club, for all are looking forward to many good times during the coming year. Mr. Smith is a Mason of good standing, also a member of the Cleveland Association of Credit Men. Since the organization of the Florists' Club he has held minor offices and, being a consistent bowler, he is called a good fellow at all times.

Results bring advertising.
The REVIEW brings results.

THE National Council of Horticulture has sent out to the daily and weekly papers all over the country a set of three articles on the fall planting of bulbs.

ROBERT KIFT, Philadelphia, says that the partridge berry globes, even in the days when nothing but fish globes were available, made the best selling novelty he ever handled. In his own store last Christmas he sold over 300 at prices ranging from $1 to $3.

Now is as good a time as any to turn over a new leaf in the matter of business methods. At least see that every one who owes you gets a statement November 1, and every thirty days thereafter.
Become a good collector and you soon will have a reputation as prompt pay.

OBITUARY.

H. F. Port.

H. F. Port, of Maywood, Ill., died October 25, after a long illness with tuberculosis. He was 45 years of age and had been engaged in the florists' business for a number of years, until failing health required his removal to the less rigorous climate of the southwest.
He was called home by illness in the family and achieved some celebrity by securing from the Interstate Commerce Commission a permit for the railroads to issue him free transportation back to New Mexico on the ground of his inability to return otherwise. But he never went back. Mrs. Port and a daughter survive. The funeral was held October 28, in charge of the Modern Woodmen.

Roy E. Carpenter.

Roy E. Carpenter, of Cohoes, N. Y., died October 20, of spinal meningitis, at the age of 32. He had appeared to be in the best of health until a few days before his death.

He was born in Cohoes and lived there all his life. He was educated in the public schools of that city and then he studied the florists' business with his father, Ansel D. Carpenter, and gave his undivided attention to it. He was a member of the Cohoes Club and the now disbanded Wheelmen's Club, and the members of these took appropriate action on his death. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ansel D. Carpenter, and one brother, Dale S. Carpenter. The funeral was held on the afternoon of October 23, at 2:30 o'clock, from the late residence. Rev. George A.

Armstrong, of the Silliman Memorial church, officiated, and the interment was in Oakwood cemetery, Troy.

Gilbert Roger.

Gilbert Roger, head of the firm of Roger & McKelvy, Meadville, Pa., was instantly killed on the night of October 19, when he was thrown from his wagon by a runaway team. The fall broke his neck.

Mr. Roger was 74 years of age and one of the oldest florists in his section.
He was widely known and the funeral, held October 22, was largely attended.
He leaves a wife and family.

Frederick Frederickson.

Frederick O. Frederickson died at his home in Kansas City October 15 at the age of 48 years. He had been a resident of Kansas City since 1897. His widow survives.

The plants can remain here until they are overhauled for starting. Any which may push flower spikes can be taken out and, after the drainage is examined and a liberal top-dressing given, can be placed in heat. As a rule, there is no special advantage in starting amaryllis before January.

Gardenias.

Considerable care is now necessary with benches of gardenias well set with buds for winter blooming, or a heavy loss of buds will result. Too much water at the root and overhead is usually the cause of so many buds dropping. It is unwise to soak gardenias as one would chrysanthemums. We prefer to keep the border during the dark months a little on the dry side. A thorough hosing twice a week, directing the water through a spray nozzle, should keep mealy bug in check. Give a soaking of water when the surface soil is fairly well dried out.
Then avoid any dribblings on the surface until another thorough watering is needed. Keep the night temperature 65 to 68 degrees for winter blooming plants. If you want them for spring, 5 degrees lower will answer. There should be no yellowing of the foliage if your benches contain rather coarse compost, which water will pass quickly through. A fine soil, producing pastiness and consequent sourness, will quickly give pale foliage.

MOUNT PLEASANT, MICH.—John Zimmerman, of the Mount Pleasant Greenhouses, has enlarged the capacity of his place and now has over 5,000 square

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The weather is always a large factor in the flower business and this month it seems to be playing an even more prominent part than usual. In the first half of October, with weather cooler than normal, business was good. This was followed by a period of unusual heat, which put stock to the bad, reduced the demand, and was the cause of the almost demoralized condition of the market all last week. Three days of cold rain, beginning October 25, have now operated to change the situation. The future of the market seems to rest largely with the weather-man. If the storm clears off cold, both the quality of stock, the quantity, and the demand will show an improvement. Warmer weather will have the opposite effect. Until the change comes there will be little doing.

It did not take the cold, rainy days to reduce the supplies of roses and carnations; the heat was already running these crops off at the close of last week. There continue to be abundant supplies of everything but Beauties; these had become short by October 24. Brides and Maids have deteriorated in quality. The demand is largely for select stock and the price of the best grade has stiffened to some extent. Richmond continues in most abundant supply, with prices moderate. Killarney is most sought after and commands a premium.

There was considerable waste in carnations last week, but the supply has been reduced while at the same time demand is improving, so that better results are anticipated for this week. In fact, some of the wholesalers look for a shortage before the week is out. The quality is improving in spite of unfavorable weather conditions.

The greatest glut, and the one which has influenced the sale and prices of all other stock, is of chrysanthemums. The unusual weather conditions have brought in the later varieties a week or ten days earlier than usual. The heat has made the stock soft and the accumulation has resulted in demoralization of the market. It is asserted by some of the wholesalers that chrysanthemums are not returning the growers much more than half what they did last year, but others say the reduction in prices is not so great as has been reported. It appears that the best goods are in demand in limited quantities, but that the oversupply of medium and low grade stock is so great that it is in this department that prices suffer most. The growers who produce the best goods are coming out ahead of the ones who give less care to their mum crops. There has been a fair sale for yellow, but white has been difficult to move. It is anticipated that the condition will be changed the latter part of the week, for the All Saints' day orders are largely for white.

The receipts of violets are about normal; quality is improving and sales fair. Valley is abundant and cheap. There are increased supplies of Easter lilies. Sweet peas show little increase, but will soon be plentiful. There is only normal business in greens.

Business this week is fair with the houses catering to the shipping demand and quiet with the ones that depend on

Single^d_a Pompon Mums

White, Pink and Yellow, 50c to 75c per bunch

These are all the rage with the high class flower buyers. Leading retailers use them for table-centerpieces, baskets, and other fine work. Put up in bunches of 25. Order a few for some good job and try them. They'll make a hit.

Plenty of fancy Bonnaffon, Appleton, Robinson and other best sorts; also medium and small Mums.

Killarney

We have a large cut of splendid Killarney, the kind of stock it is a pleasure to sell. Let's show you.

Richmond

Also order some of our Richmond—they are in the same class with the Killarney and sure to please your customers.

local trade, for the rain cut off the transients. It is the general report that All Saints' day business will be heavy; the advance orders for New Orleans are both numerous and large. There is some shipping booked for October 28 and October 30, but the bulk of the stock goes out on the afternoon of October 29. No one can claim that the average quality of stock is good, for it is soft, and much sorting is required.

Boxwood and Smilax.

New boxwood has been in some little time and there still are a few cases of last year's stock in cold storage. The wholesalers generally are disgusted with the boxwood proposition; it was a glorious good thing until it became so overdone that loss succeeded profit. Orders have been cut down for this year and a better result is hoped for.

Wild smilax has not kept as well as usual in cold storage thus far this season and the loss has cut into the wholesalers' profit. Fair demand is reported.

It is said that ferns taken out of storage are some of them in poor shape.

Various Notes.

It is reported that W. F. Hoerber has bought thirty acres of land at Des Plaines, Ill., has engaged a grower and is in the market for material for the erection of ten greenhouses, each 300 feet long. It is his plan to proceed at once with the erection of his range. It is another case of the capitalist going into the flower business.

Henry Koropp is continuing the business at 2045 Clarendon avenue, but has for nearly a year been engaged in a legal contest with his landlord, Albert Fuchs, who removed from the rear of the property a barn which Mr. Koropp had been using as a wagon room and potting shed. Mr. Koropp, accordingly, began suit last March. The case was tried in the Municipal court and was decided against Mr. Koropp, the judge affirming that wagon rooms and potting sheds are not necessary adjuncts of the greenhouse business! Mr. Koropp carried the case to the Appellate court, where it is now awaiting action.

The Wholesale Florists' Employees' Club gave its annual dance at Columbia hall, Wednesday evening, October 28. The attendance was the largest in the three years the boys have been giving these successful events. The decorations were lavish, the music good and everyone was pleased with the affair.

The Horticultural Society of Chicago has issued a pamphlet containing the constitution and by-laws, lists of officers since organization and a list of members, the latter containing 183 names. The lecture and exhibition schedule for 1908 is included.

Peter Reinberg is preparing to graft 60,000 of the Mrs. Marshall Field rose for the trade next spring. This will be in addition to the grafts necessary to supply his own requirements. This rose is not grown on its own roots. This year Mr. Reinberg has eight houses of Field.

E. C. Amling says that the New Orleans business this year will be considerably heavier than usual. He calls attention to the fact that four times as many white chrysanthemums are called for as of any other color for this occasion.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. will entertain

W. M. Ridgway, of Herrin, Ill., was in town this week, buying boilers and material for greenhouses.

Bassett & Washburn are again in with a large crop of Easter lilies, the demand for which has been ahead of the supply the last two weeks.

George Baer, of Toledo, has begun his annual shipments of Bonnaillon and Ivory to the Kennicott Bros. Co., about a week earlier than usual.

Frank Johnson, of the A. L. Randall Co., has returned from a trip of six weeks into the northwest, as far as Winnipeg. He says he visited forty-seven towns and took at least one order in every town.

H. W. Buckbee is sending fine mums to the E. F. Winterson Co.

Mrs. Fred Stollery is at present at San Jose, Cal., where she went to attend the wedding of her brother. She expected to remain six or eight weeks at the Pacific coast.

Vaughan & Sperry say their total sales are running ahead of last year in spite of the lower prices.

Zech & Mann say the shipping demand for mums is light, but fair on carnations and roses.

Percy Jones has added a card index and filing case to his equipment for handling mail orders.

ST. PAUL.

The Market.

Trade kept up remarkably well until October 10 and then experienced a severe slump. As a consequence the market has been overstocked on almost everything. Roses are the biggest glut on the market. There is also an abundance of carnations. Mums are equal to the demand, and the few single violets coming in are sold on sight.

Society seems to be at a standstill and the demand for funerals is about all that keeps business moving. We look for an improvement from now on.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Minnesota Florists' Association was held on Tuesday evening, October 20. There was an increased attendance over the previous meeting, though the night was rainy. A. J. Smith, of the Lake-wood cemetery greenhouses, exhibited Schroeter's pink carnation, a large bloom, two shades darker than Enchantress, on long, stiff stems. It looks like a winner. He also exhibited White Enchantress. In mums he showed Touse, Halliday and Virginia Poehlmann. He had a vase of Brides and Maids, which were very good, considering the poor houses in which they were grown. The committee on exhibits awarded the exhibit a diploma.

Louis Boeglin, of the Minneapolis park greenhouses, exhibited saintpaulia and streptocarpus plants, in bloom, and gave a short talk on the way he grew them.

A lively interest in the meeting was manifest throughout, which is encouraging to the officers.

Some twelve or fifteen from the Twin Cities announced their intention of attending the national flower show next month.

The subject for the next meeting is chrysanthemums. A. J. Smith will read a paper on the culture of them and J. P. Jorgenson will give his impressions of the Chicago show.

Condition of Business.

Funeral orders last week were, in one sense of the expression, the only thing that kept the bottom from dropping out of business. Stock, as it generally seems in slack times, was abundant, and the quality was fine. But in order to keep it on the move and rob the ash-barrel, it was necessary to let it go at very moderate prices. Trade still continues to be quiet, but our florists are anticipating a much better business toward the end of the week, on account of November 1 being All Souls' day.

The weather has been simply ideal; each day for an indefinite period has been bright and sunny and quite warm, but the florists all agree that if it were a little cooler there would be a marked improvement in the condition of business. The prolonged drought, which has affected this section of the country since August, and the early frosts of the season have caused everything pertaining to outdoor vegetation to simply disappear. These conditions cause the public to give more attention to the indoor culture of flowers, and therefore the florists are having a liberal share of visitors at their greenhouses.

Various Notes.

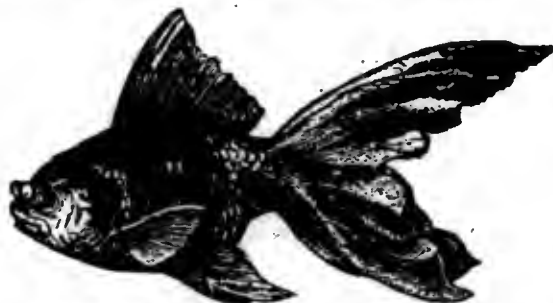

The Dayton Florists' Club will hold its regular monthly meeting at the establishment of J. F. Young, East Fifth street, on the evening of November 2.

It looks as if something were doing at the establishment of the Miami Floral Co. All hands are busy tearing down a few old buildings and getting the ground ready for the construction of a new office and packing room, with a large cellar, equipped for cold storage and with modern conveniences for the preservation of stock. They are also putting up a new tank, with a capacity of 5,000 gallons.

Herman H. Ritter is cutting some fine Brides and Maids, but he reports business slow, and not much demand for them.

Mrs. Bertha Hendrichs had several large funeral orders last week.

Mrs. Elizabeth Young reports business quiet, with plenty of room for improvement. J. F. Young, who had an arm broken about seven weeks ago, is getting

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The unhappy weather conditions which we so fondly hoped would have disappeared long ago have completely demoralized the cut flower market. Quantity has displaced quality everywhere, and the quantities of soft stock coming into the market that can find no satisfactory outlet are most discouraging. Even the most skillful growers find it next to impossible to get a satisfactory percentage of high grade cut flowers into the wholesale houses in their shipments. These are the conditions today; relief is expected daily, but hope long deferred maketh the heart sick.

Chrysanthemums rule the market. Radical observers say that this year's retail prices are about equal to last year's wholesale prices. Be this as it may, prices are lower today than ever before in the history of large flowered chrysanthemums in this market. Despite these conditions, indications of the latent strength of the market may be found in the fact that one-third more than last week's quotations (to be explicit, $3 a dozen) is being obtained today for fancy stock of Major Bonnaffon and a few of the fancy varieties. Among these may be mentioned Honesty, white; Wm. Duckham, pink; A. T. Stevens, yellow, and Mrs. Wm. Duckham, golden yellow. Other new varieties since last report include George W. Childs, red; Dr. Enguehard, pink; Early Snow, white, and Amorita, pink. This last named variety is much in demand, the color being rather scarce in the market today. Mary Donnellan, believed to be the most pleasing shade of yellow yet introduced, has made its appearance in limited quantities. Col. Appleton is more prominent than last week, much of the stock being fine. The early varieties have practically disappeared.

The carnation market has experienced a decided change during the last week. Flowers are far more plentiful, and less in demand, the smaller chrysanthemums seeming to take their place in many instances. Even the fancy stock cannot be quoted over $2 a hundred, while much of the ordinary brings little or nothing.

The rose market is immensely overstocked. American Beauties are less plentiful. My Maryland is coming to town in better shape than many of the others, possibly due to its merit as a warm weather rose, possibly to the extra care. There is a noticeable improvement in Bride, now a little more in demand at the present low quotations. Violets have proved unsatisfactory stock during the hot weather. It simply knocks them out. Orchids are not quite so plentiful, but there is no advance in the price, the demand having fallen off with the decrease in supply. Gardenias are scarce. While the demand is limited, there seems to be enough to keep up the price on the fancy stock. Valley drags badly. The rest of the list requires no special comment this week. For quotations see price list.

A Chat With Mr. Craig.

Robert Craig is considered all over America, perhaps all over the world, as one of Philadelphia's representative members of the profession. Brilliant, versatile, well informed, what he says carries weight everywhere. In discussing the present business situation, Mr. Craig said that he believes that after the election, no matter which way it goes, business will improve. While he deplores the conditions existing in the cut flower market today, Mr. Craig spoke enthusiastically of the demand for plants, which he said is better than in 1904, 1905, or in 1906, and second only to 1907, which was the banner year. It will be remembered that the financial depression did not occur until near the close of the fall shipping plant season, or about this time last year.

Mr. Craig believes that the current prices on cut blooms of chrysanthemums preclude the possibility of more than a slight margin of profit, and that the money, if there be any money, in these autumnal flowers, will be made this year during Thanksgiving week. The best varieties for that time, he thinks, are.

Golden Dome, Yellow Chadwick, and, if well done, Major Bonnaillon. Among the varieties in bloom today, Mr. Craig pointed out Amorita, a shapely pink, introduced by John N. May a few years ago, and Mary Donnellan, a last year's introduction of C. H. Totty's, considered the most pleasing shade of yellow on the market. Mr. Craig has a happy way of receiving his visitors, be they floral luminaries, or merely poor newspaper men, which makes each and all of them go away feeling very fine indeed.

Three or Four Novelties.

Phil received the glad hand from Mr. Beyer, of M. Rice & Co., coupled with the suggestion that there were a few novelties upstairs worth seeing. The handsome second story showroom was completely filled with interesting supplies. Mr. Beyer selected from among them a beautifully proportioned enameled white willow Beauty vase, tall and graceful, with an irregular yet most pleasing shape, difficult to describe. These vases are fitted with pans, and are especially adapted for displaying a few fancy blooms to the best advantage. Next came the Porto Rican mats, their number legion, their colors covering the entire solar spectrum, with the darker shades accentuated for the purpose of displaying to better advantage the bright hues of the flowers. Enameled German tone-ware vases, designed on the accepted loving-cup pattern, with three handles around the bowl, are effective. It is needless to say that all of these novelties come in an endless variety of styles and shapes. Mr. Beyer's selection simply gives an example in each class.

Curwen of Berwyn.

Berwyn is the name given a prosperous settlement that has grown around a station of the same name on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad. It is a well known fact that everything the Pennsylvania railroad does is well done, and Berwyn is no exception to this rule. The station, the approaches and terraces, the bridge over the tracks, are all first-class, and have evidently attracted a progressive class of business men. A visitor gazing at one of these shops one day this week was met by the legend, "Harness and Shoes," and while he was wondering what induced the proprietor to combine these two industries, the proprietor himself came up, shook hands in a most cordial way, and wanted to know what he could do for his newly made acquaintance. The visitor was somewhat startled, as it was out of business hours, but explained that he had been to call in the neighborhood and was not there on business.

John Curwen has a thrifty establishment about half a mile from the town of Berwyn. His home is made beautiful by scarlet geraniums and Vinca alba, a combination rarely seen in full bloom here during the last week in October. Stretching away to the left of the house are the flower and vegetable gardens, near them the poultry run, and back of this the greenhouses. Carnations, sweet peas, asparagus, chrysanthemums, violets and tomatoes are the principal crops. Everywhere one is reminded of the Chinese proverb that "There is no manure like the footsteps of the master," and also of the importance attached by expert judges, like the great Sam, for instance, to the product of the small or medium sized place, where the grower aims for quality.

Various Notes.

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Co., agents for the well known Peacock strain of dahlias, has kindly submitted the following list as its choice of the six best varieties of dahlias for cutting: Kriemhilde, cactus pink; Perle D'Or, shaggy white; Jack Rose, deep red; Virginia Maule, large shell pink; Clifford W. Bruton, large yellow; Lyndhurst, scarlet.

John N. May, Summit, N. J., was in town this week.

Sydney Bayersdorfer returned from a successful business trip October 26.

Jacob A. Fries, the veteran florist of Bethlehem, Pa., was in the city October 26.

John W. McIntyre, the hustling wholesale florist, was injured in an automobile accident at Juniper and Chestnut streets a few days ago. Mr. McIntyre chivalrously absolved the chauffeur from blame. Fortunately the accident was not serious.

Lilley & Upton report business better than expected during their first fortnight's work as wholesalers.

The Moore-Livingston Co. received commendation from the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society for the new plant stand exhibited at the society's October meeting.

Stokes' Seed Store report a heavy demand for wheat; one shipment of 220 bushels was made recently.

Thomas J. Wade, of Chicago, was a visitor here this week.

The Overbrook Nurseries, Edward A. Stroud, proprietor, and J. W. Prince, manager, have been shipping some excellent Major Bonnaillon chrysanthemums to S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

J. Murray Bassett, Hammonton, N. J., has been busy with his side-line of native orchids.

L. K. Peacock, of Williamstown Junction, N. J., made a fine dahlia exhibit before the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society last week.

W. A. Knott, the well known pansy specialist of Fox Chase, Pa., has his houses better equipped than ever before for the coming season. Mr. Knott is a regular shipper to the Leo Niessen Co.

E. A. Stroud says the chrysanthemum season is three weeks earlier than last year.

The Market.

To say that business is brisk would be putting it a little too strong; still, when one considers the unseasonable weather we are having, the thousands of people unemployed, and that we are on the eve of a presidential election, business with some of the florists is really better than would be expected. Funeral work is in good demand, plants are selling and there is considerable call for wedding decorations.

Mrs. Hugo Schroeter has been made the recipient of many pretty presents since the arrival of her little son. Among the most dainty of these was a wee little buggy filled with a small formal bouquet of rosebuds and swainsons, a gift from Mr. and Mrs. A. Pochelon and family.

E. C. Feters is again embarking in the florists' business. He expects to open up his new place at 114 Farmer street about November 10. The location is a good one and the interior finish of Mr. Feters' new store will be green walls, pale yellow ceiling and possibly white woodwork. The fixtures will be of the latest design, for the furniture is being made to order and will be in a silver gray.

Miss Isabella Carey, oldest daughter of John Carey, of Mount Clemens, died Sunday, October 25, at her home. Mr. and Mrs. Carey have the sympathy of his brother florists in their bereavement.

Schroeter's had two large wedding decorations last week, both calling for considerable stock.

November 3 practically every florist in Detroit will cast a ballot for Philip Breitmeyer for mayor. Some of the trade have voted one ticket and some another in former years, but this year party relations will be ignored so far as the mayoralty is concerned. Not only is Mr. Breitmeyer an able man, but being a brother florist we owe it to ourselves to elect him. The race will be a close one and every vote will count. H. S.

BOSTON.

The Market.

While more flowers are being sold than a week ago, arrivals continue to increase and there is a big surplus each day. Such slight improvement as there is causes grains of comfort, for conditions were about as bad as we have seen them at this season of the year. Continued unseasonably warm weather, by keeping flower buyers in the country longer than usual, hurts business. There is a hopeful feeling that matters may mend with the election uncertainty removed. Roses are superabundant, with a poor demand. Beauties are extra fine for the season and of Richmond some really fine flowers are now seen. The heat has somewhat affected the quality of some roses, Brides and Maids more especially. Carnations continue to pile up and, with no change in prices, there are many unsold.

Chrysanthemums of the midseason sorts are now in evidence, even some of the later sorts, like Bonnaffon, being on hand. The season is likely to prove the reverse of profitable, except for those who have the best flowers, and even these are not selling as they should. There are some good violets and these sell tolerably well. Some mignonette is coming in, but spikes are small. For candytuft there is little call. Valley has a fair sale, as have lilies. Callas have arrived in small lots, also snapdragons, but neither are wanted. Some extra good smilax is coming in. Other green stock is unchanged. About the only flowering pot plants much in evidence are chrysanthemums. The average quality of these leaves much to be desired.

Flower Market Banquet.

The sixteenth annual banquet of the Boston Co-operative Flower Growers' Association was held at Young's hotel, October 24. The menu could hardly have been improved upon and many words of commendation for the committee in charge were heard. A magnificent vase of White Killarney roses from Waban Conservatories occupied a place of honor in the center of the hall. Justice having been done to the dinner, the presiding officer, William C. Stickel, welcomed the invited guests and called upon W. H. Elliott for the first speech of the evening. Mr. Elliott said he would prefer not to discuss the flower market under prevailing conditions, but described a trip to Bermuda and spoke of the diseased condition of most of the lilies seen growing there.

He also mentioned another trip, to Quebec, winding up with a eulogy of the Holstein cow, the great amount of money to be made in raising this class of stock and their especial value to rose growers like himself.

W. J. Stewart said he hopes there will be a good delegation to the coming national show in Chicago. Alexander Montgomery said a few words about Rose White Killarney, believing it to be a little stronger than the parent and likely to prove a valuable addition. Thomas Pegler, as the newest addition to the stockholders, made a good maiden speech. Peter Fisher and E. A. Peirce made short addresses. J. W. Duncan showed himself to be a poet of no mean caliber, contributing a humorous composition. H. L. Cameron and W. N. Craig also made addresses.

At a business session following the speech-making, the secretary's and treasurer's reports were read and accepted. The treasurer's report showed receipts of the year amounting to $10,515.27, expenditures $10,429.23; cash balance in various savings banks $6,837.59; notes, etc., $1,140.99. A dividend of $6 per share was declared by the directors prior to the regular meeting.

Election of officers resulted as follows: President, W. C. Stickel; vice-president, William Nicholson; secretary and treasurer, George Cartwright; directors, A.

Montgomery, William Nicholson, L. W. Mann, E. Sutermeister, A. Christenson and Thomas Pegler, the last named taking the place of the late W. W. Edgar.

It was decided to hold a market exhibition again and $200 for prizes and $25 for printing was voted from the corporation. A committee of eight was appointed to start work at once on framing a schedule. W. H. Elliott, E. A. Peirce, William Sim, Peter Fisher, S. J. Goddard and others spoke on the proposed show, which is planned to far eclipse that of last March.

Various Notes.

Among those who are planning to visit the national show, in addition to those named last week, are: William Nicholson, Peter Fisher, W. J. Stewart, W. H. Elliott, E. A. Peirce and Alexander Montgomery. William Miller, Bar Harbor, Me., also will attend.

H. M. Robinson & Co. will keep open house on the evening of October 29, it being the third anniversary at their present quarters. They report the flower trade as a little better, but with far too much stock arriving. Their leucothoe, hardy ferns, smilax and other greenery are selling well. Galax leaves are now spotting badly.

At the chrysanthemum show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, opening on November 6, a silver medal is Welch Bros. are having heavy shipping orders for cut flowers. P. Welch is optimistically inclined, and believes that trade will be much better during the coming winter than a year ago. He may attend the national show in Chicago.

The numerous friends of Edward Hatch, the popular treasurer of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, are glad to learn that he is steadily improving in health.

John McFarland has a bench of gardenias, from which he is cutting a splendid crop. He has 4,000 poinsettias coming on for Christmas.

To secure greater privacy for W. J. Thurston, the manager at Park Street market, a small enclosed office has been provided for him.

William Nicholson is cutting fine Pennsylvania mums. He also has a nice lot William Sim has just completed housing his usual big lot of single violets, all in prime condition.

M. A. Patten has a large batch of his seedling crimson carnation, which is yielding a wonderful crop of blooms.

The time when the few big establishments will crush out the small ones is a long way in the future in this section. Probably nowhere else in America are there so many small and medium-sized commercial places, where the owners make a comfortable living, as within a fifty-mile radius of Boston, some pessimistic talk to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Blue Hill Nurseries reports an unusually strong demand for shrubs and perennials for fall planting.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

A round of the wholesale houses will satisfy anyone that there are enough flowers coming into this city to supply the trade, and then some, at least while the season continues when people can live outdoors. We have heard of a number of places in this part of the country where services have been held to pray for rain. If this weather keeps up and flowers continue to increase in quantity, it will be up to the florists to call a few meetings on their own account.

It has been entirely too warm to put any life into business and trade was slow all the week. While chrysanthemums have not been exactly a glut, it was necessary to sell them cheap in order to keep them moving, and carnations fared worse than mums, if anything. They are coming in quantities for which there is no demand.

Sweet peas have made their appearance, but do not look very attractive.

Vegetable Forcing.

It is reported that the famous grape-vine at Hampton Court, near London, England, has a crop of about 300 pounds this year. This vine, which is under glass, was planted in 1768. It has attained a girth of four feet six inches one foot from the ground, and covers a roof space of 2,200 square feet.

IN FAVOR OF ORGANIZATION.

I was glad to note the call issued by E. A. Dunbar, of Ashtabula, O., and S. B. Chester, of Cleveland, O., for a meeting of the growers of vegetables in greenhouses, to be held in Cleveland, O., October 30 and 31, for the purpose of organizing these growers into a national society.

I sincerely feel that these gentlemen should be congratulated as the instigators of this movement, and they should certainly receive the hearty support of all persons engaged in this industry.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

That so much talked of Indian summer is making a sort of mother-in-law visit, with no sign of an early departure.

Chrysanthemums are coming in with a rush. The numerous weddings have helped considerably to move them and the heavy demand for funeral work still keeps up. Most of the stores have the appearance of a regular chrysanthemum show.

Various Notes.

The finest mums in this market, up to the present, have been cut at Mr. Trail's plant, at Frederick, Md. His Beatrice May, white, by actual measurement, runs ten inches in diameter.

The Gude Bros. Co. has had a fine lot of Clementine Touse. They have had trouble with this variety, as the least jar snaps the bloom off at the neck. They are cutting at present a fine lot of blooms from their general stock of mums.

Z. D. Blackstone is back from Deer Park, Md., much improved and able to attend to business. He had the railway convention banquet at the new Willard hotel last week, for 300 covers.

A call at the stores found George C. Shaffer all smiles, and he reports an exceptionally busy week.

C. A. Norton reports business fair at his new store.

W. Marche reports business good. He has considerable outside work.

F. H. Kramer has been doing double duty the last week. He has had a heavy demand for funeral work.

Milton Thomas has been handling considerable stock, but prices are below par at the market at present. A few heavy frosts, to cut off outside stuff, will change this.

Miss Atwell, manager of Kramer's Ninth street store, reports business good.

The Washington Florists' Co. has a window display of long gourds, with American flags, an elephant to represent the G. O. P., and a sign, "The big stick gourd grown by the Washington Florists' Co. at Alexandria, Va."

W. W. Kimmell has been kept busy on the outside and reports business good at his Thomas circle store.

The club secretary has sent out the notices for the meeting on Tuesday evening, at Alexandria, Va. A big turnout is expected. The most important business will be plans for the success of the flower show.

J. J. Harty reports abundance of stock, which moves slowly. O. O.

SCHILDER BROS., Chillicothe, O., harvested enough onion seed so that they are offering direct to planters through the produce papers.

STUMPP & WALTER Co., New York, does a large business in poultry supplies, and is now holding a poultry show on the second floor of its building at 50 Barclay street.

THE McKay Seed & Floral Co., Jackson, Miss., is a comparatively new concern, which handles a line of field and garden seeds. J. F. McKay is in charge of the store.

A SEEDSMAN, W. E. Marshall, has been appointed to organize the horticultural section of the big industrial Taft parade to be given in New York city Saturday afternoon, October 31.

W. WILLIFORD & Co. is a new shipper of holly and wild smilax at Troy, Ala. The firm has timber leases on some 30,000 acres of land and says that in the thirty years it has been connected with the lumber business in that section it has never seen holly so full of berries as at the present time.

AT Chicago October 27 timothy seed was firmer. March closed at $3.82½ bid. Country lots, $2.40@3.50. Clover seed was dull at $8.50 for October and $6 to $8 for cash lots. At Toledo clover seed was: Cash, $5.07½; October, $5.10; December, $5.15; March, $5.27½; No. 2, $4.85; No. 3, $4.75; rejected, $4.65. Alsike, prime, $8.90.

LEM W. BOWEN, president and general manager of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, states that the reports coming from the Pacific northwest with regard to his firm's establishing a seed farm in that section are "all a mistake." Shown a clipping from a Denver paper, which said the firm was to do something large in Idaho, and asked for something authentic, Mr. Bowen said: "The only answer we can make is that we have no present intention of establishing a seed farm in Idaho, or any other western state, nor have we contemplated any such thing."

M. FULD, of W. W. Rawson & Co., Boston, says that the call for Dutch bulbs this year has been far above their supply.

ARCHIAS SEED STORE, Sedalia, Mo., is having plans made for a 2-story brick warehouse to be built in the rear of its present quarters.

ROBERT LAUGHLIN, of Kenton, O., is one of the largest growers of sets and onion seed in the Ohio district and is said to have several thousand pounds of onion seed now in store.

REFERRING to the season's business in bulbs, Peter Henderson & Co., New York, say: "We ordered very conservatively this year, so we are now buyers instead of having a surplus to offer."

ANTON C. ZVOLANEK, Bound Brook, N. J., has announced his determination to sell out his greenhouse establishment and devote his entire time to his business in seeds of winter-flowering sweet peas.

EDWARD LOTZ is preparing to start in the wholesale seed business at Salina, Kan.

JAMES VICK'S SONS, Rochester, say: "We have had a splendid trade in bulbs this fall and our stocks are rapidly closing out, so it is evident we shall not have any surplus."

J. D. FUNK, seedsman of Bloomington, Ill., had a two-column article in the Chicago Tribune October 23, in which, from the point of view of the farmer, he declared "Bryan's bank plan like bogus seed."

THE F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., reports a splendid business in Dutch bulbs. Their bulb trade extends to the Pacific coast and they felt enough confidence in the prospect for the present season so that orders for import were placed on the same scale as in preceding years. The result has been that, with the good demand, they have had one of the best bulb seasons in years.

A HANDSOME FLOAT.

Paul F. Richter forwarded the REVIEW a photograph of the float representing the Henry F. Michell Co. in the industrial parade at Philadelphia, October 7. The illustration gives an excellent view of the beautiful effect created and needs only a few explanatory words. The field, 12x20, was entirely of natural grass; the center, of red and white tulips and blue hyacinths, the national colors. The pillars were surrounded by blue hyacinths and yellow and draped with the city colors. Specimen Boston ferns surmounted the posts, and a handsome evergreen was placed behind the driver. Philip Freud, who designed the float, has modestly refrained from appearing. No other seed house participated.

ASTER SEED CROPS.

Referring to our aster seed crops, would say that we are in the midst of harvesting and up to this time have been unable to say much about the crop, but we now think that we have a fair idea in regard to it.

The indications now are that we will have less than an average crop of aster seed this season. The long continued drought has caused the plants to mature very rapidly and in consequence the seed yield will be much lighter. Queen of the Market, all colors, will be a heavy crop. Daybreak, Purity and all the late branching varieties will be a short crop. Notwithstanding the short crop, we expect to be in a position to fill all of our contracts in full. VICK & HILL Co.

SEED WAREHOUSE COLLAPSES.

The floors in a section of one of the warehouses of the Illinois Seed Co., 236 Johnson street, Chicago, collapsed at about 9 p. m., October 23, when no one was about except the watchman, who was not in the part that collapsed. A section in the center of the building, about 30x50 feet, went down, all four floors giving way, and piling up possibly ten cars of grass seeds in the break. The basement was pretty well filled up with stock, so the first floor had only a couple of feet to fall to receive support. The piles of bags on each floor in turn partly supported the floor above, so that it was only the fourth floor that went down any distance. On the fourth floor the flooring on the west side of the break, being laid without breaking the joints, parted cleanly from the joist, while the east side held, tobogganing the stock into the break. The walls of the building remained intact and, indeed, piles of bags almost on the edge of the break on the different floors were not disturbed. The seed was principally country lots of timothy, with some clover and mustard. Quite a few bags were torn, but no great loss is anticipated on this score, as machining would have been done anyway. The bursting of the water pipes put about an inch of water in the basement before the flow could be cut off, and some loss will result on this account.

The building was one which had been occupied only since May 1, 1908, and the owner had remodeled and strengthened it to carry the heavy loads incident to the seed business. The city building department had made an inspection and pronounced it safe, but the department's cards, showing the permissible load, had not been put up. A few hundred dollars will repair the building. The building is just south of the one heretofore occupied and access to the railroad switch was across the collapsed section, so that receiving and shipping were interfered with for a few days. It was stated that about 150 cars of seeds were in the two buildings at the time of the collapse, with eight or ten on track next day. Much of the stock also is stored outside, but less this season than in the past. The business, under the presidency of George S. Green, is growing rapidly.

BUSINESS IN BULBS.

Referring to the business in Dutch bulbs, which in normal seasons is drawing toward a close at this date, Harry A. Bunyard, with Arthur T. Boddington, New York, says:

"With regard to the surplus of bulbs this season, we are afraid that we are like the small boy who said, 'There ain't goin' to be no core.' Speaking from our own experience this season, we find bulbs moving rapidly, and we have had to cable several additional orders, besides buying a quantity in this country to fill our orders. We are also being continually asked for stock by dealers, whose orders we reluctantly have to turn down. We do not think there has been much surplus so far in the bulb business this season, as the men buying purchased conservatively last spring, which is one of the main reasons for the above condition. This also applies to the small dealers and florists, who on second thought have decided to buy more bulbs for growing and for local trade.

"There is still a good month for selling bulbs and, while there may be eventually some surplus at the tail end of the season, it will be nominal."

GARDEN SEED SUPPLIES.

As regards seed crop supplies for the approaching season of sale, conditions are most unusual, because of the shortage in stocks covering such a broad field as respects genera and varieties.

Every year there are harvested a few short crops of seeds of certain families of vegetables, while of other families, and by far the greater proportion, there are generally harvested either bouncing seed crops or at least sufficient supplies to fill all usual demands, but the past summer and autumn of 1908 have developed an unprecedented condition of an unusually lengthy list of short seed crops, and worse yet, in many instances the short crops of seed were of those particular varieties of which little was carried over of crop 1907.

This is most particularly noticeable with the families of peas, beans, sugar corn, cantaloupes and other vine crops, beet, tomatoes, egg plant and radish, nearly all varieties of which have already greatly advanced in value. Of some the harvest has only been twenty, thirty and forty per cent of expectations, while many of them have only been saved in such quantity as to warrant an expectation of seventy to seventy-five per cent of the prognostications of the summer. Seed crop returns in the first instance, as where the returns are thirty to forty per cent, are most alarming, and in the second instance, where the returns are seventy to seventy-five per cent, they are such as can only meet moderate demands.

These conditions, which in many instances it will be perceived are most stringent, are not yet so fully realized as they will be in some few weeks hence, by which time final reports from growers will have been received, but even now

ONION SETS AT CHICAGO.

From a source connected with South Water street and the provision trades comes this statement of the onion set market:

"The onion set crop in Chicago territory is about all harvested and is conceded to be short from 25 to 30 per cent this year owing to dry weather, but the quality is good. The weather was hot and dry in July when the sets were bulbing and this has given a hard, sound set.

"Prices being paid to farmers are about $1.75 for reds and yellows and about $2 for whites. Some farmers are even refusing to sell at these prices and say they will hold until later.

"Considerably more stock has been shipped up to the present time than the average at this season. Business is in nice shape and everybody is working overtime putting stock into storage.

"The average crop from Chicago territory runs from 400,000 to 500,000 bushels. There are no very heavy lots being put in storage on a speculative basis, as practically all the crop is sold."

CATALOGUES RECEIVED.

V. Lemoine & Son, Nancy, France, plants and seeds; Roustan Servan & Co., St. Remy de Provence, France, flower, vegetable and field seeds; Sluis & Groot, Enkhuizen, Holland, vegetable, flower and agricultural seeds; S. Bide & Sons, Farnham, Surrey, England, general nursery stock; Scheiden & Schoos, Chicago, Ill., circular on the William Howard Taft carnation; A. F. Longren, Des Plaines, Ill., circular on the Lucille and O. P. Bassett carnations.

ARCOLA, ILL.—Thomas J. Denny thinks he has a great find in a tomato that is first light green, then white, then yellow and finally red when ripe.

ASHLAND, KY.—William H. Carp is having one of the busiest fall seasons in the history of his business. He is doing considerable decorating for receptions and parties of all kinds.

JACKSON, MISS.—The McKay Seed & Floral Co. has opened a store on Capitol street, in charge of J. F. McKay. The greenhouses are in the suburbs and at the store it is planned to do everything in the seed, nursery and florists' lines.

NATICK, MASS.—As the ordinary city water supply had become inadequate for the Waban Rose Conservatories, the water commissioners agreed to extend the large pipe of the system to the greenhouses. Before this plan can be carried into effect the action of the commissioners must be sanctioned by the voters, but it is not thought that there will be any difficulty in securing the voters' consent.

The Market.

Business is fair, although hardly up to that of the same time last year. Some of the retailers have had quite a funeral trade, but outside of this there is little to report.

Mums are in their prime at present and are fully up to the standard of former years. The outdoor grown stock is almost exclusively produced by the Chinese and the prices are well down. From $1 to $2 per hundred is the ruling price. Indoor stock is bringing fair prices and moves well. Carnations are almost a drug at present, on account of the excess of mums in the market. The best flowers cost the retailers from $2 to $3 per hundred. Roses are much more plentiful than at any time since spring. There are quantities of Bride and Maid brought into town and anything except long stemmed stock moves slowly.

Violets, since the couple of days' rain, are more plentiful and show better color and length of stem. Smilax is getting in better shape and maidenhair fern and asparagus seem to be slightly scarcer. A few late blooming Japanese lilies and amaryllises are seen, but their seasons are practically over.

Various Notes.

The Marin County Horticultural Society held a successful flower show at San Rafael.

The Menlo Park exhibition was held at Redwood City October 23 and 24.

Jas. Niven, gardener to H. E. Bothin, at Ross Station, has a fine showing of tuberous begonias in his conservatories at present.

Luther Burbank, of Santa Rosa, will lecture at the State University at Berkeley on his new plant creations during the coming week.

George Hansen has gone to southern California on a business trip and expects to be out of town for a couple of weeks. G.

A GOOD CLIMATE FOR DAHLIAS.

I have expressed to the REVIEW two of my new dahlias, hoping you will receive them in good order, so that you can see how great their merits are. One of them, as you will see, is red, the best, purest and most brilliant red, with no shade of crimson in it. I named it after our governor, J. N. Gillett. It is a splendid keeper. I have kept the flowers for two weeks in good condition. The other, the amber colored and incurved one, is named Sequoia. It is as nearly chrysanthemum-flowered as can be.

I have many other fine varieties of my own raising, which I wish you could see, as the climate here, at Eureka, Cal., is unsurpassed, I think, for the growing of dahlias. The climate is cool, with a good deal of foggy weather and few really hot, sunny days, so dahlias grow to perfection. This summer, however, has been exceptionally dry and there has been a shortage of water for irrigation. Consequently the flowers I have sent you are rather small, especially the Sequoia, which normally is about twice as large and blooms earlier in the season. I have dahlia blooms from May till November, on the same plants. Last year they bloomed till December, as we had no frost to hurt them till later.

So far this season we have had but little frost, not enough to do any harm, and the long dry spell is broken. During the last three days we have had about four inches of rain, with warm weather, so the dahlias may make a fresh start and bloom a good while longer, especially those of late planting.

HENRY MELDE.

[The dahlias, on arrival, were not in a fresh enough condition to be accurately judged, but our opinion, as far as we are able to form one, is that the varieties are probably fine enough to be true to Mr. Melde's description.—Ed.]

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Market conditions last week were not encouraging to either grower, retailer or wholesaler. The weather was warm and unseasonable and stock of all kinds was overabundant, with a scarcity of buyers. Prices, of course, went down on all grades of stock. Carnations, which have been scarce right along, became a glut and extra good stock was bringing only $1 per hundred, for which $2 and $3 were asked the week previous. The market opened October 26 with not so many, but they will again increase in the next few days.

Roses were even in less demand than carnations and at all the wholesale houses they were a glut, with prices low on all grades. Downtown retailers were selling them at 15 cents and 25 cents per dozen. Extra fancy American Beauties sold fairly well.

Chrysanthemum blooms were in demand, especially fancy grades in yellow and white, with prices not as high as usual at this time of the year.

Violets have been selling well, but these are not as yet of good quality. The warm weather of last week did them no good. The violet growers say that it will take a week of cold weather to bring out the color to make them sell well and bring a price.

As we have not yet had a killing frost, cosmos, tuberous and dahlias are still coming in from outdoors. Valley is plentiful and of fine quality.

This week is horse show week and most of the retailers are looking forward to quite an increase of business in cut flowers.

four days, in Armory hall. The prospects are for a large exhibition and a successful show, both socially and financially. At the close of the show, November 6, quite a delegation of local florists will leave here for Chicago to attend the National Flower Show. The delegation will consist of fifteen or twenty. John Steidle, of the Florists' Club, has charge of the transportation.

Visitors: E. J. Fancourt, of the Pen-nock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia; L. R. Nelson, of Nelson-Morris Mfg. Co., Peoria, Ill.; J. Stern, Philadelphia; M.

HAMMONTON, N. J.

The frost of October 13 settled all dahlias, and shipping came to an abrupt stop in this section. Cosmos was slightly affected by the same frost, though not so seriously, only a few of the flowers being nipped. Rain is wanted to bring out the late flowering stuff, such as hardy mums, to perfection.

Last week, while William F. Bassett, the veteran dahlia grower, was returning from Atco, the harness of his horse became disarranged and the animal bolted.
Mr. Bassett, however, had enough presence of mind to steer the horse into a peach orchard alongside the road, where the wheels sank into the deep sand, stopping the horse in a short time. Mr. Bassett is in his eighties and is the originator of several good dahlias.

J. Murray Bassett, of Packard street, flowered a nice, fancy dahlia among his seedlings. It is a pretty red, with a tint of orange in its center petals. Of course it needs another trial to prove its merits. H. K.
